3G: Hua Hin auction cancelled, TOT/AIS make plans

■ HUA HIN, THAILAND

Many readers may have missed the news about last week's 3G auction, due to be held at the Evason Resort in Pranburi on September 20th, being cancelled, as an injunction issued by the Central Administrative Court was upheld by the Supreme Administrative Court on Thursday (23rd).

This seemed to sound the death knell for advanced communications ever appearing in a country already lagging badly behind near neighbours, as Vietnam announces its 4G plans, for example.

However, brighter news has emerged this week as the Cabinet approved a revised plan by TOT to build a new next-generation mobile network, giving access to one in two people to 3G technology in just over six months.

TOT plans to build a 19billion baht network on the 2100-megahertz spectrum, and will improve and increase the present 4,700 3G nodes, or base stations, to 5,400 to cover all areas of Bangkok and 12 to 15 key provinces.

Meanwhile Advanced Info Service (AIS) says it is ready to start providing commercial 3G services in partnership with TOT as a so-called mobile virtual network operator (MVNO), following the cabinet approval. TOT will allow 50,000 AIS mobile numbers to roam its 3G network for data services in exchange for voice roaming by the state telecom's 20,000 customers on AIS's nationwide 2G network.

The failed auction process is estimated to have cost the country 80 million baht.

Do you wonder why we say certain things, or what they really mean? Each week we will examine a different word or phrase and tell you how it came about.

This week it is.. To boot

Moreover; in addition to.

"To boot" is one of those phrases we use constantly but rarely think about. And we're certainly living in a "to boot" culture. Rent a car and they throw in airline tickets to boot. Buy a refrigerator and they give you a television to boot. File a tax return and they give you a free ride to the cleaners to boot. That last one may not count, but you get the drift.

One might assume that "to boot" must have something to do with our normal, pedestrian sort of boot. One would, however, be wrong. The boot you wear on your foot (one of a pair, under optimal conditions) comes from the Old French "bote." The verb "to boot" also comes from this footwear sense, meaning "to kick" or "to kick out." The use of "to boot" meaning "to start the process by which a computer gets itself up and running" harks back to the phrase "to pick oneself up by one's bootstraps," meaning to be self-sufficient and enterprising. "To boot" meaning "in addition" comes, however, from an entirely different source.

The Old English "bot" meant "advantage or good," and came in turn from the root Germanic "bat," meaning "good or useful," which was also the source of our modern "better" and "best." This sense of "boot" as "something good" led to its use, at various points, to mean "a remedy," "a mending" "compensation for wrongs," and even "expiation of sins." There was even a right of "boot," meaning the custom of permitting a tenant to repair his house with lumber from his landlord's forest. And "to do boot" was to do a good deed or render a favour to someone.

Of all these senses, however, only our modern sense of "to boot" as meaning "in addition," which first appeared way back around A.D. 1000, still survives in common usage today. Robert Manning of Brunne included a version of it in Langtoft's Chronicle, 1330:

"A hundreth knyghtes mo... and four hundreth to bote, squieres of gode aray."

■ BOURNEMOUTH, ENGLAND

Bournemouth Barclays bank bricked up by irate property developer

Property developer Cameron Hope has bricked up the front door of a Barclays branch in Bournemouth after being turned down for a business loan.

Mr Hope was supported by other local business owners as he built a 2.4m (8ft) by 1.2m (4ft) wall in front of a branch of Barclays in Bournemouth.

Mr Hope used breeze blocks and posters to obstruct the main door of the bank, which he claims has treated him unfairly during the economic downturn.

The 59-year-old, whose protest has been widely publicised in the area, said: 'The banks are stifling economic recovery by not lending to businesses. 'Enough is enough.'

The wall was taken down after police threatened to arrest the protesters.

However, Mr Hope says his views on the bank's lending policies have not changed and he has vowed to continue fighting the cause.

■ ALBANY, AUSTRALIA

Australians on trail of 'whale rider'

Officials in Australia are on the trail of a young boy, dubbed the 'whale rider', after a number of people witnessed a man climb on the back of a Southern Right Whale.

In addition to the fact that harassing wildlife in Oz is a serious offence which carries a hefty penalty fine, officials also fear for the safety of the male in question.

Mike Shephard, from the Department of Environment and Conservation in Albany, Western Australia told the BBC: 'If you are in the way of a tail slap...you are unlikely to survive,'

'Disturbance or physical contact with them...not only distresses the whales but also could result in a tragic outcome for a foolhardy person,' Shephard added.

Western Australia has strict laws in place, in order to protect the whales off its shores, including a minimum distance of 30m for swimmers and surfers.

■ DEAR MARY - A RETRACTION

Last week this column featured a letter from a man who had fallen for the owner of the 'Lager Time Group' bar. At the request of the owner of the real Lager Time Group bar we are printing this retraction of said letter, and the response to it from Mary.

At no time did the events described in the letter actually occur between the letter writer (Sydney, Pranburi) and the owner of the real Lager Time Group bar. The events described may have occurred between the letter writer and the owner of another bar, possibly known as the Beer O'clock Club, which is located in Khao Takiab, Thailand. However due to the possibility of legal action, we will refer to said owner as Mr X. We approached Mr X to allow us an interview to clear up this misunderstanding and here is an edited transcript of that interview:

AWOL: Did you have sexual relations with that man, (Sydney, Pranburi)?

~~Torry~~ Mr X: Well that depends what you mean by 'sexual relations' doesn't it?

AWOL: OK, did you have sexual intercourse with that man?

~~Torry~~ Mr X: I never had sexual intercourse with that man.

AWOL: Did you have any other kind of sexual relations with that man?

~~Torry~~ Mr X: I refer you to my first answer.

AWOL: What about the lurid green shirt that Sydney claims he wore because you asked him to? That seems to indicate a certain level of intimacy?

~~Torry~~ Mr X: I do like that shirt, yes.

AWOL: Isn't it true that you have suggestive photographs of Sydney wearing that shirt on the wall of your establishment?

~~Torry~~ Mr X: Might have.

AWOL: Doesn't one of these photos show a tender physical embrace? Were there not some incriminating stains on the shirt?

~~Torry~~ Mr X: This is a set up! I'm not going to answer any more of these stupid questions (runs out of room).

Mary says - Time for some of these folks to get themselves down to Lolitas I reckon...

Premier League News

Fixtures and predictions (all times Thailand)
Saturday, 2 October 2010

Wigan v Wolverhampton, 18:45
Wolves were a tad unlucky not to get something last week, while Wigan were probably glad not to concede; both will see this as winnable and will go for it - a draw is thus likely.

Birmingham v Everton, 21:00
A creditable away draw last week still saw Everton drop to the bottom of the pile, and neither of these teams seems to have much firepower. A goalless draw.

Stoke v Blackburn, 21:00
Not a game for the purists but still likely to be an enthralling battle, which we expect Stoke to edge.

Sunderland v Man Utd, 21:00
Expect a backlash from the Red Devils after dropping points last week, and we think Sunderland will come a cropper here.

Tottenham v Aston Villa, 21:00
We think Villa's 5th place is a little lucky, and they are fortunate to be facing Spurs after their midweek Champions League game; draw.

West Brom v Bolton, 21:00
The Baggies are bouncing at the moment but Bolton are likely to put a dampener on things - away win.

West Ham v Fulham, 21:00
Second London derby in a week for the fast improving Hammers and we think Fulham will struggle against their new found confidence; home win.

Sunday, 3 October 2010

Man City v Newcastle, 19:30
City showed their mettle and Newcastle their frailties last week and we expect a comfortable City win here.

Liverpool v Blackpool, 21:00
'Woy' must be wondering what he has let himself in for at Anfield, while Blackpool's promising start is stuttering now. Surely a home win?

Chelsea v Arsenal, 22:00
The big game of the weekend as the Blues get a second test in a week of their champion status; both had solid midweek wins and we can't separate them, so a score draw.

Millions will watch Commonwealth Games to see if something collapses

■ NEW DELHI, INDIA

MILLIONS of people who had no intention of watching the Commonwealth Games are now eager to tune in just to see if the stadium collapses.

Organisers had feared mass indifference to the world's most irrelevant sporting spectacular but now anticipate record figures based on the treacherous state of the multi-hundred pound facilities.

Some of the best action is expected to be in the velodrome, which was completed in a personal best of just under two hours by a gang of Filipino infants and is really just of a lot of old magazines piled precariously on top of each other.

Meanwhile the bottom of the Delhi Commonwealth pool was finished late last night with some sheets of grease-proof paper and a couple of packs of India's version of blu-tak.

Sports construction analyst Stephen Malley said: "About three or four seconds into the men's 100m backstroke the bottom should give way and all the swimmers will be sucked down what will look to the TV viewers at home like a giant plughole. God only knows what happens to them after that."

The state of the art Jawaharlal Nehru Stadium (above) can bury up to 80,000 people

Audiences can also look forward to seeing some of the world's least famous athletes competing while severely traumatised from spending the night in the Commonwealth Village.

Malley added: "Watch out for the Canadian long jumper Kirk McKenzie lying on the track weeping like a grandmother after trying to wash himself with a single sheet of wet toilet paper. "It is going to be a challenge to break 8.5 metres when you've been sitting up in bed all night, clutching the blanket to your chin and listening intently for signs of chronic structural weakness."

Experts said the exciting gap between the promise and the reality of Delhi's Commonwealth facilities reflected the amazing richness and diversity of India in the 21st century.

Tom Booker, author of "India: Land of Stone Me, What's that Stench?" said: "Remember this is a society with cholera and a space programme. It is a society divided between the 20 or so people who appear on the Sunday Times Rich List and think the entire world looks like the lobby of a five star hotel and the other billion who live knee deep in their own excrement."

He added: "Given that about 80 people die in India whenever someone opens a cupboard, if they can keep the Commonwealth Games death toll to under 3000 it should be regarded as an unqualified success."
