GREECE IS THE WORD

NEW RETAIL PARK TO OPEN NEAR CHA-AM WITH GREEK THEME

HUA HIN, THAILAND

Hot on the heels of the announcement of a Venetian themed retail outlet just north of Hua Hin comes Santorini Park. which is scheduled to open on 24th March just north of the Cha-Am turn off on Phetkasem Road. Pena House Group is spending 500 million baht to develop the park, which is located on a 50 rai plot at Petchkasem Road Kilometre 198. The development is a combination of an amusement theme park and shopping mall, comprising five main zones: Park, Village, Rest, Event and Sunday Art Market.

The park will feature 6,000 square metres of retail space, in the first phase which is on 15 rai of the land. The architecture is inspired by the Greek island of Santorini and decorations including sculptures in pop art and modern-art styles as well dancing fountains.

The Park Zone will feature rides such as a 40-metre Ferris wheel and a double-deck carousel, imported from Italy, as well as a G-Max Reverse Bungee and G-Max Giant Swing from New Zealand and Wallholla from the Netherlands. The Village Zone will feature more than 140 retail shops with fashion and accessory stores, fast-food outlets, coffee shops, convenience stores, drug and personal-care stores, souvenir shops and a petrol station among the 60% of the space already allocated. The Event Zone with 3,000sqm of retail space will feature events and concerts. The Sunday Art Market will be a special zone for those who are fond of the arts.

The Pena Group also operates the Premium Outlet Cha-Am, which is approximately two kilometres from the new development, and the strong sales growth there has encouraged the group to open this new outlet. It is also another indication of the business community's faith in the future of this area as the unprecedented number of new retail, hotel and other projects continues unabated.

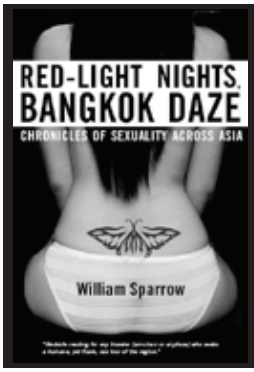
Return Bar is one of only a few bars in Hua Hin that has a full size (9 feet) pool table, as well as a more standard size table for the pool hackers amongst us!

They have a team entered in the Hua Hin Pool Billiards League which plays every Friday (see p 28 for current standings, results and fixtures) and new players are always welcome.

Open every day from late afternoon, Return Bar is a great place to relax away from the hassles of the town centre, and somewhere you will find yourself coming again and again!



Sometimes contradictory, bewildering, revolutionary and hypocritical, Red-Light Nights, Bangkok Daze is a collection of articles on the complex and fascinating world of sex in Asia.

■ Do you wonder why we say certain things, or what they really mean? Each week we will examine a different word or phrase and tell you how it came about.

This week it is.. Cold enough to freeze the balls off a brass monkey (We have featured this phrase before but repeat it here due to an email we received from Clive - be warned it is very long and continues on page 12)

Very cold weather conditions. Also known by the derivative phrase - brass monkey weather.

Some references say that the brass triangles that supported stacks of iron cannon-balls on sailing ships were called monkeys and that in cold weather the metal contracted, causing the balls to fall off. The derivation of this phrase is difficult enough to determine without such tosh, so let's get that oft-repeated story out of the way first: Cartoons of pirate ships always come complete with the usual icons - parrots, peg legs and pyramids of cannon-balls. That's artistic license rather than historical fact. The Royal Navy records that, on their ships at least, cannon-balls were stored in planks with circular holes cut into them - not stacked in pyramids. These planks were known as 'shot garlands', not monkeys, and they date back to at least 1769, when they were first referred to in print.

On dry land, the obvious way to store cannon-balls seems to be by stacking them. On board ship it's a different matter. A little geometry shows that a pyramid of balls will topple over if the base is tilted by more than 30 degrees. This tilting, not to mention any sudden jolting, would have been commonplace on sailing ships. It just isn't plausible that cannon-balls were stacked this way.

For those wanting a bit more detail, here's the science bit. The coefficient of expansion of brass is 0.000019; that of iron is 0.000012. If the base of the stack were one metre long, the drop in temperature needed to make the 'monkey' shrink relative to the balls by just one millimetre, would be around 100 degrees Celsius. Such a small shrinkage wouldn't have had the slightest effect. In any case, in weather like that, the sailors would probably have better things to think about than coining new phrases.

So, what is the real origin of 'cold enough to freeze the balls off a brass monkey'. Anyone looking for the origin of this is likely to be put off the scent by the 'balls' in the phrase. Of course, the way we now understand the phrase is that it is cold enough to freeze one's testicles off (ladies, don't feel left out, there is the alternative 'as cold as a witch's tit in a brass bra'). Once we realize that the phrase is seen in print many times in various forms well before any variant that mentions balls, it becomes clear that trying to explain which balls were being referred to is something of a fool's errand. There may have been some journalistic coyness about using the current version of the phrase - it is, after all, commonly understood to refer to testicles. That's view is backed up by the fact that there are almost no citations of the balls variant in any US newspaper, even up until the present day. There's no evidence to prove that that variant existed in the 19th century. 'Cold enough to freeze the balls off a brass monkey' appears to have originated in the USA in the first part of the 20th century and is clearly based of earlier variants. The earliest citation of that precise phrase that I can find is from as late as 1978 in the autobiography of Mary Oppen, Meaning a life:

The first taxi man George encountered in Brooklyn said, "It is cold fit to freeze the balls off a brass monkey."

There were earlier balls version - Bluestones' The Private World of Cully Powers, 1960: "I'm so hungry I could eat the balls off a brass monkey". There's little doubt that the phrase was circulating almost the general public before WWII - some years before it appears in print.

In Arthur Mizener's biography of F. Scott Fitzgerald The Far Side of Paradise, he includes part of a letter written

■ WEDDING

At a wedding reception, the best man got up to make his speech, and at the end of it said, "And now would all the married men stand next to the person that made your life worth living.

The bartender was crushed to death.

■ SNOW STORM

A blonde got lost in her car in a snow storm. She remembered what her dad had once told her. "If you ever get stuck in a snow storm, wait for a snow plow and follow it."

Pretty soon a snow plow came by, and she started to follow it. She followed the plow for about forty five minutes. Finally the driver of the truck got out and asked her what she was doing. She explained that her dad had told her if she ever got stuck in the snow, to follow a plow.

The driver nodded and said, "Well, I'm done with the Wal-Mart parking lot, now you can follow me over to K-Mart."

■ SEX

A sweet little girl runs out to the backyard where her father is working, and asks him, "Daddy, what's sex?"

So, her father sits her down, and tells her all about the birds and the bees. He tells her about conception, sexual intercourse, sperm and eggs etc. He tells her about puberty, menstruation, men and women and love.....

He thinks what the hell, and tells her the works, thinking that to tell it all is the only way to tell truth.

The girl is somewhat awe struck with this sudden influx of bizarre new knowledge, and her father finally asks, "So why did you wish to know about sex?"

"Oh, mommy said lunch would be ready in a couple of secs..."

■ MOON MISSION

NASA is launching a rocket to the moon. On board there are two pigs and Kiki, a stunning blonde. When the rocket is outside the stratosphere, the first stage drops off.

Contact is made: "Houston here, Pig 1, Pig 1, do you read us? Over."

"Oink, oink, here Pig 1, read you loud and clear."

"Pig 1, do you still know your instructions?"

"Yes, when we get to the moon, I press the red button to initiate the moon landing. Over."

"That's right. Over and out."

They go on until the rocket separates its booster stage.

"Hello, Pig 2? Come in please."

"Oink, oink, here Pig 2, read you loud and clear."

"OK, Pig 2 do you remember your instructions?"

"Yes, when we've landed on the moon and are ready to leave, I press on the green button to initiate the launch program."

"That's right, Pig 2. Over and out."

An hour later, when the rocket has achieved the correct speed the last stage drops off as planned. Ground control contacts the astronauts again.

"Houston here, Kiki, come in. Kiki do you read us?"

"Kiki here, reading you loud and clear."

"Kiki, do you remember your instructions?"

"Yes," Kiki says, "I feed the two pigs and keep my hands off any buttons."

by Fitzgerald's wife Zelda in 1921: "This damned place is 18 below zero and I go around thanking God that, anatomically and proverbially speaking, I am safe from the awful fate of the monkey." The risqué nature of Zelda's life and writing style suggests that she wasn't referring to the monkey's nose, tail or ears.

Later, but still before WWII, Eric Partridge, in A Dictionary of Catchphrases, repeats this report: Shortly before WW2, The Crazy Gang at the Palladium played a sketch wearing fur coats, hats, gloves etc. When the brass balls fell from a pawnbroker's sign, one of them exclaimed, "Blimey, I didn't know it was that cold!"

At this point it is probably worth looking at those early citations of the phrase. Interestingly, many early versions refer to heat rather than cold and the first known version of the phrase mentions neither balls nor cold. That is found in Herman Melville's novel Omoo, 1847:

It was so excessively hot in this still, brooding valley, shut out from the Trades, and only open toward the leeward side of the island, that labor in the sun was out of the question. To use a hyperbolical phrase of Shorty's, "It was 'ot enough to melt the nose h'off a brass monkey."

Other printed mentions of brass monkey that followed a little later in the 19th century are:

Charles Augustus Abbey, in Before the Mast in the Clippers, 1857: "It would freeze the tail off of a brass monkey."

John Esten Cooke's The Wearing of the Gray, 1865: 'His measure of cold was, "Cold enough to freeze the brass ears on a tin monkey."'

An article in the Illinois newspaper The Decatur Republican, 1868: "...every idiotic copperhead editor in the country, who hasn't got as much brains as a brass monkey..."

There are many other hot/cold variants of the phrase in print from the 19th century:

- less bashful than... (1867); - scald the throat of... (1870); - talk the leg off... (1872); - as cheeky as... (1873); - burn the ears off... (1876); - had touched the heart of... (1878); - singe the hair on... (1879)

All of these combine to suggest that the brass monkey in question wasn't a particular beast or object but merely a synonym for a generalized inanimate object. If that's so then, what was a brass monkey?

The young boys who helped with the loading of cannons on naval ships were called powder monkeys. Other seafaring monkey business relates to ancient forms of cannon called brass monkeys, or drakes, or dogs. These were recorded in an inventory published in 1650 - The articles of the rendition of Edenburgh-Castle to the Lord Generall Cromwel:

"Short Brasse Munkeys alias Dogs."

Brass drakes/monkeys were referred to in J. Heath's Flagellum, 1663: "Twenty-eight Brass Drakes called Monkeys" and in The Taking of St. Esprit in Harlech, 1627: "Two drakes upon the half deck, being brass, of sacker bore".

There's also a nautical reference from 1822 for the monkey tail which appears in the earliest known version of the phrase. This was a lever that was used to aim a cannon.

It might sound like the work of CANOE (the Committee to Ascribe a Naval Origin to Everything) but, given these citations and the large percentage of references to brass monkeys in nautical contexts, it seems likely that the inanimate object in question was in fact a naval cannon. The 'balls' are a recent appendage.

Strip club launches 'Alibi' aftershave to recreate scent of the office

A range of perfumes and colognes launched by a strip club aims to recreate the scents of commonly-used excuses given by men who are trying to explain to their other halves where they have been all evening.

You're home late, your clothes are dishevelled you smell of alcohol. How do you convince your better half you really weren't out on the tiles?

The answer may be here... in the form of a new range of aftershaves designed to throw suspicious wives and girlfriends off the scent.

The Alibi range can mask the smell of a heavy night with aromas linked to more wholesome activities.

For example, My Car Broke Down is said to recreate the scent of fuel, burnt rubber, grease and steel, while I Was Working Late packs the odour of coffee, wool suits, cigarettes and ink.

The three fragrances, which cost £24 a bottle, were launched by South African lap dancing club Mavericks, which said it never expected the idea to take off.

But it has been inundated with orders from countries in the Far East and Europe – including Britain.

'Men seem desperate to get their hands on this stuff,' said the Cape Town club's boss Shane Harrison.

Ferrari threatens legal action over world's fastest limousine

The world's fastest limousine – a modified Ferrari that can go up to 170 mph – may no longer be able to use the famous Italian name after the supercar manufacturer threatened legal action.

The owner of the vehicle Dan Cawley has been ordered to remove everything from the car that associates it with Ferrari as company lawyers claim he has infringed their trademark.

But Mr Cawley said before he converted the 400bhp beast he specifically asked the car manufacturer whether he could go ahead and they agreed he could.

When it was built the modified 360 set the record for fastest limousine and longest Ferrari. Mr Cawley built the car along with former McLaren carbon fibre expert Chris Wright for a total cost of around £200,000.

FEATURED GAME

SATURDAY, 28 JANUARY 2012
FA CUP 4TH ROUND
Liverpool v Man Utd, 19:45
Anfield, Liverpool, England
The standout tie of the 4th round of the FA Cup as these two fierce rivals meet yet again. Neither have looked particularly strong in defence, and this is likely to be a pulsating affair. We think Liverpool's desire might be greater, and with the home advantage will push them, just, to victory.

ROONEY DEFIES LOGIC BY SAYING 'ARSENAL COULD STILL WIN THE TITLE' WHILE KEEPING A STRAIGHT FACE

■ MANCHESTER, ENGLAND

Manchester United forward Wayne Rooney has managed what many thought was impossible after he said that 'Arsenal could still win the title' without laughing.

The remarkable display of self control was followed by an exhibition of straight-face showboating as he went on to insist that England have a "chance" of winning Euro 2012 – all without even the slightest hint of a smile.

With Arsenal currently 15 points behind leaders Manchester City with 17 games remaining, it was believed that keeping a straight face while not ruling Arsenal out of the title race was impossible.

A previous attempt nearly ended in tragedy when Tottenham manager Harry Redknapp had to undergo heart surgery after he got as far as "Arsenal could still" before collapsing with a big grin on his face.

Left: "And then I said, 'Of course Arsenal can still win the title...'."

"I certainly wouldn't write Arsenal off, they're capable of going on a big run," Rooney told a clearly amused interviewer.

The interview had to be temporarily stopped after he went on to say "You can't write them or Chelsea off", causing the interviewer to fall off his chair into a puddle of his own urine.

The interview was stopped altogether several minutes later to allow the cameraman to receive the Heimlich Maneuver following claims by Rooney that Liverpool striker Andy Carroll will "score goals".
