RUMOURS THAT HOLLYWOOD TEAM DUE IN TOWN TO ASSESS HUA HIN FOR BLOCKBUSTER

■ HUA HIN, THAILAND

Strong rumours have been circulating in the movie world that Thailand, and specifically Bangkok and Hua Hin, are on the verge of being selected as the backdrops to the next instalment in the Mission: Impossible movie series.

Following the spectacular fourth movie, Ghost Protocol, set largely in Moscow and Dubai, it's success has already prompted the studio to confirm a fifth project, and the storyline that has been leaked certainly seems suited to the Land Of Smiles, involving a threat to a Royal Family, a chase scene through a crowd at a beach jazz festival, a thrilling escape from a flooding underground car park, a spectacular action scene set on a raised railway in a city and another on a construction site.

Characters identified in the story are Squealer, a British expat who gets embroiled in the murky world of drug smuggling and people trafficking, Kilty, an undercover reporter who is in danger because of his fearless exposures of criminals, an unnamed (as yet) property developer whose unsavoury past is catching up with him, and a Chinese Triad gang acting on the orders of a disgraced former politician exiled from his country.

The project of course hinges on whether the star of the previous four movies, Tom Cruise, agrees to make the fifth instalment; however, it may also depend on how the Thai authorities feel the movie would depict the country if they decide to film here. Another fly in the ointment could be the fact that no one knows if there ever will be another jazz festival on the beach here, which may help decide the title of the prospective blockbuster; 'Mission: Impossible - Hua Hin Jazz Festival?'.

■ Do you wonder why we say certain things, or what they really mean? Each week we will examine a different word or phrase and tell you how it came about.

This week it is... (Once) Every Preston Guild

A question from an English expat living in Australia this week (thank you Rod), who enquired about this phrase that he used to hear frequently when living in Lancashire, England.

This phrase is used most commonly as 'every Preston Guild' and its meaning is 'rarely', or more precisely, every twenty years.

The origin is contained in the phrase but requires more explanation for those unfamiliar with it. A guild is an association of craftsmen in a particular trade. The earliest types of guild were organized in a manner something between a trade union, a cartel, and a secret society. A lasting legacy of traditional guilds are the guildhalls constructed and used as meeting places. In their heyday guilds were very powerful and influential but as politics and attitudes changed, and industrialisation, free trade and globalisation commenced, many became outlawed.

Preston is a city - it gained city status in 2002 - in Lancashire, in the north-west of England. Preston was granted the right to hold a Guild Merchant in 1179, and this meant that only Guild members could ply their trade in the town. Membership was updated from time to time, and from 1542 it was decided that once every twenty years was sufficient for this administrative task. When Guilds were held the town received an influx of visitors and there was much feasting and merrymaking.

In the 19th century the powers of the Guild were removed, but the local people lobbied for the continuation of old traditions and so Preston Guilds became festivals and pageants for all the citizens of Preston, not just the tradespeople.

The Preston Guild is the only such Guild festival still celebrated in the UK. The next Preston Guild is being held this year, 2012, and for the people of the area it is a huge event, bigger than the Olympics taking place a few hundred miles to the south. It begins on Friday 31st August and runs to Sunday 9th September and for anyone who is in the vicinity, it is well worth going along.

■ MADRID, SPAIN Introducing the smart bed that makes itself

The endless chore of making the bed could soon be a thing of the past with Spanish bed specialist OHEA designing a revolutionary new piece of bedroom furniture which could save valuable minutes in the morning rush to get ready.

The device has been designed to mechanically straighten out a person's sheets, duvet and pillow in less than 50 seconds. Featuring two different settings, the smart bed could finally put an end to creased sheets and messy bed making.

'Making the bed after getting up is a daily chore,' say OHEA on its official website.

'Although it might seem a minor one, it has the character of a ritual that must be carried out, so much so that many people are simply unable to leave the home without having made their bed and this often gives rise to conflicts and arguments between parents and children.

'It's a proven fact that for many people making their bed after getting up can be a tiresome, even painful task; sometimes out of sheer habit, other times because one is in a hurry and lacks time.'

■ NEW YORK, USA Competitor claims world's longest burp record at belching championship

A competitor at the first annual World Burping Championships has broken the record for the world's longest burp.

The 18.1-second mammoth belch helped Tim Janus beat four other competitors to secure the coveted title at the event at Hudson Station in New York. After downing gallons of fizzy drinks, the 35-year-old stepped up to the microphone to deliver his seismic gassy release.

'I was just trying to condense all the air in my stomach and bring it to the surface,' said winning competitor Janus. 'You just have to force every last bit of air up. It's beautiful, really.'

The World Burping Federation is 'here to dispel the stigma of an essential, and some would say necessary, function,' host Dave Keating said.

'We're here to say that after a fantastic meal, one should be able to burp with enthusiasm and intensity - and be rewarded for that.'

■ STUNNER

I bumped into an old school friend today. He started showing off, talking about his well paid job and expensive sports car.

Then he pulled out a photo of his wife and said, "She's beautiful, isn't she?"

I said, "If you think she's gorgeous, you should see my girlfriend."

He said, "Why? Is she a stunner?"

I said, "No, she's an optician."

■ ANTIQUES ROADSHOW

I took two stuffed dogs I had onto the Antiques Roadshow.....

"Ooh," Said the presenter, "This is a very rare breed, do you have any idea what they'd fetch if they were in good condition?".....

"Sticks?" I replied.

■ QUICKIES

An irish man who took Air Lingus to court after his luggage went missing has lost his case.

I once dated a girl who owned a parrot. The thing would never shut up. The parrot was cool though.

Just take things one day at a time this week, even though you're up against a race of impossibly advanced aliens who can move through time at will.

GEMINI MAY 22 – JUNE 21

Fire and water magicks are strong in your sign this week, so maybe it's time to consider quitting your job on that offshore oil rig.

Games are being shown in Thailand on the Thai channels 3,5 and 7; however due to a dispute between the company that bought the rights, GMM Grammy, and True Visions, the True Visions signal for those channels has been blacked out while the games are on. This may be resolved at some point during the tournament though.

FANTASY FOOTBALL - EURO 2012

LOSING THE RACE?

EURO 2012 RACISTS ADMIT THEY MUST 'IMPROVE' AFTER WAITING TWO DAYS FOR UEFA REBUKE

■ POLAND & UKRAINE

Racists across Ukraine and Poland have admitted they need to 'up their game' after their latest outbursts at a Dutch training session took two days to be acknowledged by Uefa officials.

Despite chanting at black players in front of Dutch team officials, spectators, reporters and television cameras, the delay in any official acknowledgment from Uefa has left racist groups insisting they will try harder in future.

White supremacist Mikael Thomset told us, "We did our best, but it was a training session, and we're not all match-fit yet. I'm sure that now the tournament is underway you'll see us in fine voice and at the centre of Uefa's attention."

"I would urge the racists across Europe not to discount us just yet. Behind closed doors we're working hard and once that whistle goes, we will be ready, you can rest assured of that."

Left: UEFA officials have stated that it is very difficult for them to spot racists in the large crowds attending the tournament

Uefa president Michel Platini has defended his organisation's stance, insisting that racism is not an issue at Euro 2012, at least not until he hears the words 'cheese-eating' or 'surrender-monkey'.

He told reporters, "There is a very subtle different between shouting abuse at the 'black bastard' and the 'bastard in the black', and we have to be sure we're not misinterpreting perfectly harmless vituperation due to language or cultural differences."

Football fan Simon Williams told us, "Nothing about Uefa's stance on racism surprises me these days, I think the only way we'll ever see them stand up to it properly is if one of their major sponsors is outed as being 'black'."
