FOOD FOR THOUGHT

FOOD DELIVERY TAKES OFF IN HUA HIN

HUA HIN, THAILAND

Bangkok, Pattaya, Chiang Mai and Phuket have had it for years. Korat has for a couple. Thailand is gradually catching on to the convenience of your favourite restaurant's food being delivered to your home or office, and now Hua Hin has joined the club with two services having started this year.

Only one of them, however, is dedicated exclusively to food and beverage delivery, and that is Phone For Food, who launched at the beginning of April. Offering an increasing number of menus from quality local restaurants, the team behind the operation have told AWOL that they welcome restaurants not currently listed to contact them to discuss joining the service.

Currently the types of cuisine available includes Thai, Indian, Mediterranean, Mexican, American and German, with French, Italian and others soon coming on stream. Full details are available on their website at phoneforfood.com, and with delivery charges between forty and ninety baht (with any order of 1500 baht or more getting free delivery) gone are the days when you have to struggle into town to enjoy your favourite food, or are limited to a choice from the big brand fast food restaurants.

Phone For Food's operating hours are from 10am to 10pm, although some menus will not be available at certain times. If you wish to be kept abreast of developments and new menus, either email info@phoneforfood.com to join their mailing list, or follow them on Facebook (PhoneForFood).

■ A section for all you budding etymologists where each week the origin of a word or phrase is investigated.

This week it is....(1) Like billy-o

An extreme standard of comparison; for example, "It rained like billy-o; we were all soaked through.".

There isn't a clear-cut explanation of this phrase's origin. As it involves a common name, it is easy to come up with eponymous suggestions; for example, the 19th century steam locomotive the Puffing Billy. Alternatively, the derivation is said to be from Joseph Billio, the zealous 17th/18th century Puritan preacher. Billio preached at the United Reformed Church in Market Hill, Maldon, Essex, in and around 1696. He was an enthusiastic 'hellfire and damnation' preacher and, given his name and reputation, ought to be a serious contender as the source of the phrase. They are certainly convinced in Maldon, and it must be true - they have a plaque to prove it.

Regrettably, the phrase didn't become common until long after Billio's death and disappearance into obscurity (had you heard of him before?). The earliest printed record of the phrase in print is in the US newspaper The Fort Wayne Daily Gazette, March 1882: "He lay on his side for about two hours, roaring like billy-hoo with the pain, as weak as a mouse."

Around the same time, a similar phrase emerged in the USA. In the North Dakota newspaper The Bismarck Tribune, September 1883, there's a piece of what Mel Brooks would have called "authentic frontier gibberish", under the title An Old Frontiersman Talks:

"You say Ol Grant was 'yar with the gang
And the capital's one hoo-doo
And the people cheered him like billy-be dang
Why, pardner, it can't be true!"

This latter example appears to be a version of 'Billy-be damned', which had been recorded earlier, in 1849, in the Gold Rush Diary: "Theodor looked as big as billy-be damned"

Those citations both have the ring of minced oaths, i.e. euphemistic phrases that endeavor to avoid speaking the name of religious figures. It seems probable that 'billy-be damned' and 'billy-o' were references to the Devil. 1849 sees the first use in the USA (and possibly anywhere) of the name billy-goat to denote a male goat. The term 'billy-be damned' could well have been used to indicate the Devil, following the imagery that pictured Satan as a monster in goat's form.

(2) The penny drops

A belated realization of something after a period of confusion or ignorance.

The Oxford English Dictionary states that this phrase originated by way of allusion to the mechanism of penny-in-the-slot machines. The OED's earliest citation of a use of the phrase with the 'now I understand' meaning, is Nigel Balchin's novel A Way through Wood, 1951: "I sat and thought for a moment and then the penny dropped."

The image of someone waiting for a penny-in-the-slot mechanism (which often jammed) to operate does sound plausible and, if that isn't the origin, it is difficult to imagine what is.

The usage is surely earlier than 1951 though. Public toilets still then required users to 'spend a penny' in order to unlock the door to get in but, even counting those, coin operated machines were much less common in the 1950s than they were in the Victorian era.

Earlier citations, which make literal reference to actual coins and which are likely precursors of the later figurative use of the phrase, appear in print in the USA from the early 20th century; for example, this piece from the Maryland newspaper, The Daily News, November 1921: The penny dropped [into the weighing scales], the needle started around the figures, and stopped this time on 150.

■ CHINA Man walks away unharmed after two-tonne bell falls on him

A man has had a lucky escape after a two-tonne bell fell on top of him and trapped him at a temple. Lin Wang was visiting the museum with friends who decided to ring and spin the bell while his mate was standing underneath it. This led to the rope holding the construct snapping and the bell enveloping a bemused Lin.

'This bell is very old and should have been treated with respect,' said a temple spokesman. 'Instead, it broke and the bell fell on top of the man like a trap. The bell is very heavy and he's lucky he wasn't crushed,' he added.

The tourist was rescued following an operation from firefighters who managed to free him after setting up winches and pulleys, and then lifting the bell.

Lin was undeterred despite the temple staff being annoyed. 'It's a bell, it's supposed to be rung,' he added. 'They should have made sure it was safe.'

■ BOSTON, USA Police allow Dunkin' Donuts stores to remain open despite Boston lockdown

Boston was put on lockdown throughout the day on Friday – although The Simpsons' Chief Wiggum would be a proud man after it emerged Dunkin' Donuts was given special dispensation to remain open.

While offices and retail outfits were advised to close for the day as the search for suspected Boston marathon bomber Dzhokhar Tsarnaev continues, the doughnut chain revealed they have carried on serving – with the permission, and at the special request, of local law enforcement officers.

'At the direction of authorities, select Dunkin' Donuts restaurants in the Boston area are open to take care of the needs of law enforcement and first responders,' the company said in a statement.

Jessica Cadorette, a store manager at a Dunkin' Donuts in Newton, Massachusetts, said, 'There was an automated message going around telling businesses to close.

'But because we're Dunkin' Donuts, we called the police department and they said we didn't have to [close].

Dunkin' Donuts is as famous for its coffee as its deep-fried sugary treats – and caffeine will definitely be the order of the day for officers conducting detailed searches of the area as they aim to keep locals safe.

But it's nice to think the age-old police officer stereotype – made famous by Chief Wiggum – remains unabashed.

IT'S A GIRL THING

By William Sparrow

It is often said that it is a man's world, and even in more sedate destinations of Thailand like Hua Hin this would seem to hold true if you are a female traveller. Travelling alone, working here or even in a group of girls the mantra proves true as entertainment – particularly nightlife - is indelibly geared towards men.

Whatever the case female tourists and expats soon learn this truth as they settle in to Hua Hin or similar communities. The notion of or desire for a holiday romance with an expat guy soon, in most cases, vanishes as the women come to terms with local realities. Bars and nightclubs catering to foreign men abound, outnumbered seemingly by only the number of eager, young and attractive Thai girls that are waiting to provide them companionship.

The foreign ladies find themselves in an environment rife with competition, if they are even willing or interested in competing in the first place. It is not like the women are aloof to the nature of the relationships and their basis, to think so would be naïve. While for the guys out on the pull, to say that it puts them in an uncomplimentary light with the foreign girls would be putting it mildly to say the least.

Yet the men who come to Thailand for that sort of entertainment know the score ahead of time and usually just shrug it off without concern. It is in this way that the female traveller is similar; because it is those who come here 'knowing the score' that are best able to also shrug it off, leaving them free to enjoy the many other attractions and indulgences on offer. So while the men are busy behaving like spoiled schoolboys, foreign women can truly make the most of their holiday.

But who really ends up getting the short end of the stick? Is it the men who give up some self-respect, cash in their wallet and a shade of dignity for a night of debauchery they might never be able to experience in their home country? Or the western women left to the wayside without an opportunity for meaningful male companionship but working to make the most of their holiday?

It is a hard question to answer, because depending on whom you ask you will get much different opinions on the matter.

■ TEETH (surprisingly NOT a Luis Suarez joke!)

A little boy goes shopping with his mother and is waiting right outside of the ladies dressing room for his Mum to come out. While waiting, the little boy gets bored and just when his mum comes walking out, she sees her son sliding his hand up a mannequin's skirt.

"Get your hand out of there!" she shouts. "Don't you know that women have teeth down there?"

The little boy quickly snatches his hand away and thanks his lucky stars he didn't get bitten.

For the next ten years, this little boy grows up believing all women have teeth between their legs. When he's 16, he gets a girlfriend. One night, while her parents are out of town, she invites him over. After an hour of making out and grinding on the sofa, she says, "You know, you could go a little further if you want."

"What do you mean?" he asks.

"Well, why don't you put your hand down there?" she says, pointing to her crotch.

"HELL NO!" he cries, "You've got teeth down here!"

"Don't be ridiculous," she responds, "There's no such thing as teeth down there!"

"Yes there are," he says, "My mum told me."

"No there aren't," she insists. "Here, look for yourself."

With that, she pulls down her pants and gives him a little peek.

"No I' m sorry" he says. "My mum already told me that ALL women have teeth down there."

"Oh for crying out loud!" she cries. She whips off her panties, throws her legs behind her head and says, "LOOK, I DON'T have any teeth down there."

The boy takes a good long look and replies, "Well, after seeing the condition of those gums, I'm not surprised!"

■ AN INNOCENT MAN

A policeman was patrolling near midnight at a local parking spot overlooking a golf course. He drove by a car and saw a couple inside with the dome light on. Inside there was a young man in the driver's seat reading a computer magazine and a young lady in the back seat calmly knitting.

He stopped to investigate.

He walked up to the driver's window and knocked. The young man looked up, obligingly cranked the window down, and said, "Yes, Officer?"

"What are you doing?" the policeman asked.

"What does it look like?" answered the young man. "I'm reading this magazine."

Pointing towards the young lady in the back seat, the officer then asked, "And what is she doing?"

The young man looked over his shoulder and replied, "I think she's knitting a sweater."

Confused, the officer asked, "How old are you, young man?"

"I'm nineteen," he replied.

"And how old is she?" asked the officer.

The young man looked at his watch and said, "Well, in about twelve minutes she'll be eighteen."

AWOL

ABSENT WITHOUT LEAVE IN CHA AM
FOR THE EXPAT IN ALL OF US

A 'DEL AMITRI' WEEK

Reliant as AWOL is on the good people of Cha Am to keep us posted about the happenings in the town, we seem to have some sort of dead zone this week with nobody reporting anything of interest.

This may, of course, be partly due to the midnight curfew in some parts, although our snouts have not reported back on this recently, so it may have been lifted? However assuming it is still in place, no doubt the good people of the town have been heading to other areas to spend their money, to the detriment of the owners and staff of the afflicted venues.

In case any of you are wondering what a Del Amitri week is, it is not some Italian wideboy - Del Amitri were a Scottish pop band in the late 1980's and early 90's whose best known song was 'Nothing Ever Happens'...

CHA AM BALLOON CHASERS

RETAIL THERAPY

We're not entirely convinced that this should be included as an 'attraction' but for some people shopping, and dedicated retail outlets are a leisure pursuit, and can sometimes be a welcome relief from the heat.

Cha Am is 'blessed' with a couple of specialist retail parks, one of which doubles as a theme park. This latter one is a fairly recent addition, located a few kilometres north of the town on the main highway, and is hard to miss given the giant ferris wheel emblazoned with the name of this 'Amused Shopping Experience' - yes it is Santorini Park, based on the look of a Greek village with lots of white walls and blue windows. At weekends they charge 50 baht to enter and then extra fees to ride the wheel and a few minutes in the 3D theatre (both 120 baht) and a ride in the sling shot (600 baht +!!). Other rides are also available in the Park Zone. Drinks and snacks are reasonably priced and there are shops selling a variety of clothes, goods and souvenirs. There is also a weekend arts market. Open Monday – Thursday from 10.00 a.m – 9.00 p.m. Friday – Sunday from 10.00 a.m – 10.00 p.m.

Narathip Road, Cha Am

Further north, about 6km from Cha Am is the Cha Am Premium Outlet Village; this has been established for several years now, and has over 100 different retail outlets, selling the latest in designer clothing, sportswear and footwear for all occasions, from many of the world's leading brands such as Lacoste, Diesel, Nike, Puma Adidas, Nautica and Quicksilver. You'll also find the largest golf store in Phetchaburi, Golf Challenger Hall, which specialises in selling professional golf equipment and merchandise from many of the sports leading names. Many of the items that are available there can be reduced by as much as 70% off the recommended retail price, so it can be worth the trip. It is also home to a large food court and an impressive grill and seafood restaurant. Open from 10am to 8pm Mon-Fri and 9am to 8pm at weekends.

Going south from Cha Am, about 10km outside Hua Hin on the right opposite the Sheraton resort is the FN Factory Outlet. It's open until 8 pm daily and there is plenty of shaded parking at the front. The buildings are set in very modern grounds with a quirky but fun collection of life-sized pink dinosaurs outside and an attractive garden populated with dozens of white bunnies.

The choice of brand name items, often available at large discounts, is extensive – suits, shirts, trousers, dresses, shoes, ties, bedding, furniture, lingerie, beachwear, and even luggage.

The smaller adjacent building on the site includes a pizza restaurant and coffee shop, and sells various home-ware and kitchen items.

■ EXTRA VALUE

Despite income and exchange rate issues, it is still possible to live fairly cheaply in Hua Hin. Fresh food and ingredients are plentiful, and the markets and street stalls continue to provide excellent bargain meals at a fraction of the price of many restaurants.

Expats who are happy to eat Thai food most of the time, and who are willing and able to cook at home from locally sourced produce, can live as healthily - if not more so - than they did back home, and probably for much less. Those with bigger Pension pots can of course dine out more often, and enjoy all the comforts of home, including the 4 x 4 and satellite TV.

It really isn't any different to living anywhere else. If the income allows a more lavish or comfortable lifestyle, then most of the necessities for that are now available in Hua Hin. Including Tesco.

I have always had a problem with this great God of the retail world, and now treat it as a necessary evil. Thai people on the other hand have taken to it like ducks to water, and who can blame them really? There is everything they need under one air conditioned roof, (maybe a clue there) some tempting little eateries, (another clue) and all with ample parking for motorbikes. The puzzling thing is how they find their own motorbikes after shopping. Let's face it, it is difficult enough finding your own car in the average supermarket carpark, but at least a click of the key fob can provide a clue when you are in range of it.

And how many Thai people, like us farang, actually end up spending more than we had intended to in these shrines to the retail con?

It isn't just Tesco which is guilty of this of course. All supermarket chains vie for our custom, and in the UK, where shopping wisely requires a degree in maths and nerves of steel, supermarket price wars are a way of life.

One thing Hua Hin and Hull do have in common is a huge Tesco store. Both in fact opened at about the same time, and both to a mixed response from their local communities. The Hull store does have more car parking than motorbike parking spaces. It probably doesn't have such an extensive range of ice creams in it's eatery (although I have never lingered long enough to check) and it certainly doesn't stock pink eggs. Otherwise it is much the same, and now stocks huge sized bags of rice.

The moral to this story is that wherever we live it is always wise to shop around and use the markets and small independent shops whenever possible. Use it or lose it.

Talking about Tesco reminds me of some of the things which expats have to face when they finally return to their country of birth. You think that not much will have changed - same old weather - same old faces - and in fact many things do stay the same even after many years away. But the first thing to completely baffle me after a few years in Thailand was car number plates. Since childhood I had been able to know the age of any vehicle, give or take 6 months, and its' place of registration, by it's number plate. An 'N' in front was a 1997 car. A 'D' at the end was 1966. Similarly the letters denoted where it had first been registered. You get the drift.

In just a few short years however some Whitehall mandarin had completely messed up the whole system. One excuse (sorry - sound reason) for the change was to try to avoid the traditional UK annual rush to buy new cars in August, when registration plates were changed to signify a new year of manufacture. Now there are two issues of registration plates per year, which is supposed to even things out a bit.

Conspiracy theories aside I still cannot fathom the new system, and have given up trying.

A much smaller culture shock was the realisation that what I had assumed to be a new UK designer label - Florence and Fred - was in fact the brand name for Tescos' range of clothing.

CHOMPING AT THE BIT

LIVERPOOL TO CONSIDER HAVING LUIS SUAREZ PUT DOWN

■ LIVERPOOL, ENGLAND

Liverpool face the unpleasant prospect of having their star striker Luis Suarez put to sleep, according to experts.

Brendan Rogers faces the difficult decision to continue with his Uruguayan pedigree after a biting incident left Chelsea's Ivanovic only identifiable by Suarez's dental records.

Suarez was lucky not to be sent off after receiving a yellow card in the first half for sniffing David Luiz's bottom during a free kick.

"Having reviewed the video footage and spoken to Luis, his behaviour is unacceptable and he won't be allowed out for walks," said Reds manager Brendan Rodgers.

"He loves chasing the ball but I'd like to see him do more than just sit there with it in his mouth awaiting further instruction."

"That's something I'd hoped to work on in training."

Left: Liverpool have already taken the precaution of making Luis 'Good Boy' Suarez wear an extra training bib

Meanwhile, the FA would also like to speak to Suarez regarding an incident in the tunnel when the striker startled match officials by lying on the floor and licking his own genitals.

Rodgers added, "Sniffing David Luiz's bottom is bad enough, but this together with the incident where he urinated against the corner flag at Carrow Road leaves me with very few options."

"I've had him since he was a pup so it's going to be very hard to have him destroyed."

"Some of the younger players like Raheem Sterling and Daniel Sturridge have become very attached to him so I'll probably just tell them he's gone to visit his parents in Uruguay on an open return."

Rodgers concluded, "I'd like to offer my apologies to Ivanovic who I understand was left foaming at the mouth at the incident."

"He'll probably want to get that checked out."
