JAZZ POPS UP AGAIN

HUA HIN JAZZ FESTIVAL RETURNS

■ HUA HIN, THAILAND

After a no show last year, the Hua Hin Jazz Festival has been reinvigorated this year and will take place on Friday 31st May and Saturday 1st June at the Centara Grand Beach Resort and Villas.

The festival is taking a slight change in direction this year, with a focus on up and coming Asian talent mixed with some local stalwarts, and moving away from Western acts.

The line-up includes Japanese outfits Jun Abe Group and Les Freres, Indonesian pianist Nita Aartsen, plus Thai jazz acts including Koh Mr Saxman, Mellow Motif and Infinity who'll be joined by a wealth of pop and easy-listening artists, among them ETC, the Vie Trio, Artip "Keng" Charoenchaisakulsuk, Tong and Jennie, King and His Band, Cholanan "Lookpad" Limthai, Teerapak "Ten" Maneechot, "Academy Fantasia" coach Thanat "Big" Thanyaharn, Love Me Please and Asawin Duriyangkul of Calories Blah Blah. Also appearing will be Thanasit "Ton" Chaturapush from "Academy Fantasia", Nonthanan "Kacha" Anchuleepradit, Rata "Tabby" Kokilanont, Pakamon "Lookpong" Bunyaputi and 123 Soul.

Commenting on the line up, Itthi Nana, managing director of organiser Bangkok Fanatix said,"We realise these are essentially pop artists but they will be singing jazz numbers. Real jazz doesn't draw large audiences so we need to expand the fan base of the festival and featuring veterans and youngsters who come together with their fan club, is the way to do it."

An estimated 15,000 people are expected to attend the event, although at press time it had not been made clear if this was to be a free event as in previous years. More information can be obtained by calling 02 641 5844 or by visiting the Facebook page at www.facebook.com/HuahinJazzFestival.

■ A section for all you budding etymologists where each week the origin of a word or phrase is investigated.

This week it is..... Doff your hat

Raise your hat in acknowledgement of or deference to another.

Doffing seems to be an activity that is limited to hats or caps; it isn't often that we hear the verb used in any other connection. That needn't be the case though, as becomes apparent when one realises the connection between 'doffing' and 'donning'. We can don hats and caps, but we can also also don clothes, shoes, even a persona or a set of ideas and, as doffing is the opposite of donning, anything that can be donned can later be doffed. The origins of these strange little words are simply 'do on' and 'do off'.

When the terms 'doff' and 'don' were first used there was no especial connection with headgear. The first usage of it found in print is from Sir Thomas Malory's Le morte Darthur, circa 1470: Doffe of thy clothes, And knele in thy kyrtylle. [A tunic or petticoat]

Shakespeare was fond of the word 'doff' and used it frequently, often in a figurative manner, which alludes both to the removal of clothes and of opinions. In King John, 1595, he has Constance say "Thou weare a Lyons hide! doff it for shame." and in The Taming of the Shrew, 1596 "Fie, doff this habit, shame to your estate". He also frequently used the alternative 'daff' and its past tense 'daft', as in the 1597 sonnet A Lover's Complaint: "There my white stole of chastity I daft."

In the 16th to the 18th centuries in England, the donning and doffing of hats was governed by a code of etiquette and custom that it is hard for us now to appreciate. Every man of standing wore a hat, and the form of hat and the rules governing when it could be removed or for whom it should be raised in acknowledgement were bewilderingly complex. Hat doffing was an accompaniment to bowing and the depth of the bow determined how far the hat was lifted. In 1896, James Boyle, in an attempt to remove the drudgery of continually lifting his hat, registered a patent for a form of self-doffing device. When the wearer bowed to an acquaintance, the hat lifted itself, rotated once and lowered again. The hats didn't catch on. As Shakespeare might have put it - it was a daft idea.

■ NEW YORK, USA. Boss offers employees pay rise for getting tattoo of company logo

A New York real estate agency is helping its employees get ahead by offering staff a pay rise in return for them getting a tattoo of the company logo. Rapid Realty employees are being offered a quick, if not a little painful, way to climb the pay grade ladder with the offer of a 15 per cent wage increase. So far, 40 willing staff have taken up their manager Anthony Lolli's bizarre offer and got inked with the company's green and black logo.

While cynics may suggest the number may not have been quite so high without the financial incentive, the newly tattooed employees swear otherwise. 'I think it's a good opportunity to show commitment to a company that makes going to work fun every day,' Robert Trezza said. Fellow employee Joseph Tighe added: 'My wife was a little concerned but I said, you know what, it was the best commitment I could think of.'

Each Rapid Realty tattoo costs around $300 (£195) and there is no restriction on where you get the body ink.

Manager Lolli has yet to get a company tattoo himself but says he plans to eventually.

■ OLDHAM, ENGLAND Police dog eats pet hamster during raid on home

A police dog ate a man's hamster during a raid on a home in Oldham. Police had taken their loyal sniffer dog as they searched an address for drugs. The canine apparently knocked the hamster's cage over, setting the rodent free – before swallowing it in one go. The dog was forced to cough it back up by its handler, but the hamster had already perished. The events panned out as police searched the home of Musa Khan, 46, last May.

No charges were brought against Mr Khan in connection to the raid. However, officers did stumble upon a bald parakeet and Khan was prosecuted by the RSPCA. Khan pleaded guilty to failing to prevent suffering at Oldham magistrates' court. Defence lawyer Tim Hughes said Khan had kept animals for many years and said Miko the bird was already losing its feathers when he took it in, and that he nursed it back to health. 'He accepts keeping the bird in a cage that's close to a radiator and TV in a room where an old cat has been,' he said.

Nonetheless, Khan was fined £110 and told to pay £400 costs. He has been banned from keeping a bird for two years. Miko has since been rehoused by the RSPCA.

SIAMESE STORIES

UNDERCOVER THAILAND:
SEX, SIN AND SMILES

HAVING YOUR CAKE...

By Roger Norwood

There has been an apparent surge of nationalistic fervour in European countries in recent years, shown by improved election results for either right wing or independent political groups, most notably very recently in the UK, where the UK Independence Party (UKIP) shocked the mainstream political parties in local elections with a quarter of the popular vote.

Many of the proposed policies of these nationalist parties have similar themes, such as more stringent immigration control, a reduction of the welfare state and in the UKIP's case, a withdrawal of the UK from the European Union. All these parties have been accused of being closet racists either because of their current or former ties to more extreme right wing groups, or the nationalistic and jingoistic language they use.

Anyone who has been in Thailand for some time will see parallels with how many of the political parties here view the world, and in fact how most Thai governments have operated; broadly they publically espouse an insular approach where they take care of Thailand and the Thai people, with much less regard for countries or people from outside their borders. Many foreigners either visiting or living here do not feel very comfortable with this, feeling somewhat 'put upon' by both the perceived (and sometimes actual) xenophobia as well as the bureaucratic hoops they must jump through to remain here. Tourists will rarely be aware of this, and most foreigners will put up with it, even though internet forums are always awash with gripes on the subject.

Which brings me to the nub of this article - the clear intention of the nationalist parties in Europe is to attempt to reduce immigration and the perceived dilution of their countries' cultural identities, as well as the reduction of government expenditure on benefits to immigrants. While Thailand does not have a bloated welfare system nor an overbearing tax threshold, it does share the same aim of retaining it's cultural identity, and perhaps more importantly, retaining land ownership for it's people. Those foreigners who complain about their unfair treatment at the hands of the Thai authorities will rarely take the advice of others to 'just go home then', more often than not because they are unhappy at their own government's lax immigration policy, which, according to many website warriors, has cost the jobs of the indigenous population. However these same folk would cheer to the rafters if, for example, the UKIP came into power and instigated Thai-style policies.

I am not here to say who is right or wrong on the weighty political issues of immigration and expenditure - a country's destiny should be decided by it's population through the ballot box in free and fair elections; the issue at stake here is the consistency of those who complain when they suffer under the rules here, and then clamour for similar rules in their home nation. You can't have it both ways.

William Sparrow is away but will return soon. Thank you to Roger for his submission.

■ OLD FLAME

I received a phone call from a gorgeous ex-girlfriend who, this morning, called 'out-of-the-blue' to see if I was still around. We lost track of time, chatting about the wild, romantic times we used to enjoy together.

I couldn't believe it when she asked if I'd be interested in meeting up and rekindling a little of that "old magic".

"I don't know if I could keep pace with you now", I said, "I'm a bit older and a bit greyer and balder than when..... you last saw me. Plus I don't really have the energy I used to have."

She just giggled and said she was sure I would "rise to the challenge".

"Yeah." I said. "Just so long as you don't mind a waistline that's a few inches wider these days! Not to mention my total lack of muscle tone...

everything is sagging, my teeth are a bit yellowed and I am developing jowls like a Great Dane!"

She laughed and told me to stop being so silly.

She teased me saying that tubby, grey haired, older men were cute, and she was sure I would still be a great lover.

Anyway, she giggled and said, "I've put on a few pounds myself!"

So I told her never to call me again.

■ MODERN MARRIAGE

Jill and John got married. John thought this would be a modern marriage - equal roles for equal partners. So, the first morning back from their honeymoon, he brought Jill breakfast in bed. Jill wasn't impressed with his culinary skills, however.

She looked disdainfully at the tray, and snorted, "Poached? I wanted scrambled!"

Undaunted, the next morning, John brought his true love a scrambled egg. Jill wasn't having any of it. "Do you think I don't like variety? I wanted poached this morning!"

Determined to please Jill, the next morning he thought, "third time's a charm" and brought her two eggs -- one scrambled and one poached. "Here, my love, enjoy!"

Jill looks at the plate and says, "You scrambled the wrong egg...

■ MAX MILLER

Max Miller died 50 years ago this week...here's one of his cleaner ones...

'I said to my father: "Dad, I want to get married."

He said: "Alright son, who do you want to marry?"

I said: "I'd like to marry Miss Green".

He said: "You can't".

I said: "Why not?"

He said: "She's your half-sister. When I was a lad I had a bike and I got around a bit."

I said: "Alright, I'll marry Miss White."

He said: "You can't, she's your half-sister. Forget about it."

Well, I was a bit despondent and I walked around and my mum said to me: "What's wrong with you?"

I said: "Well, I said to Dad I wanted to marry Miss Green and he said I couldn't because she's my half-sister. I said, "All right, I'll marry Miss White." He said: 'You can't, she's your half-sister."

She said: "Look, you go and marry which one you like. He's not your father anyway!"

AWOL

ABSENT WITHOUT LEAVE IN CHA AM FOR THE EXPAT IN ALL OF US

AN APPEAL

The future of AWOL in Cha Am has been put into some doubt because our Cha Am partner, Darren at the Cha Am Pub, is finding it difficult to juggle the demands of his business with the work required to bring AWOL to the residents of Cha Am.
Thus we are appealing this week for anyone who is interested in taking over the coordination of AWOL's advertising and distribution in Cha Am to contact us so we can discuss a possible handover. Benefits include a free quarter page advert in the Cha Am section plus a cut of any advertising revenue generated in Cha Am.
Should we fail to find a suitable person to handle these responsibilities then it is a strong possibility that AWOL will no longer be distributed to Cha Am every week.
Darren has agreed to continue for the remainder of May, but beyond that feels he will be unable to adequately fulfil the duties required.

RUBBISH DUMP

A recent visitor to our adopted and much loved Thailand was taken back by the blatant disregard from many of the locals in relation to their environment. He witnessed (as we all have) constant littering and dumping of rubbish everywhere. "Oh, dont walk 3 meters to that bin over there! NO Just throw your garbage on the ground.. Its normal.. Oh, I want to clean out my junk so I'll find the closest empty lot and just dump it there.. I'l throw my putrid left over food on the ground where I sit on the beach.. I'l relieve myself at the nearest tree..I'l get a plastic bag for EVERY SINGLE item I buy from Seven so that I can just chuck it on the ground as soon as I can.. Hang on lets take our garbage to the bin and instead of Putting it IN THE BIN I'm just going to place it NEXT to it because I'm too lazy to even open the thing.." Honestly these things need to be taught in the schools so that the next generation will actually care for this beautiful country or it will become (and fast is) a cesspit of steaming smelly rubbish.

ENTERTAINMENT

The Chaam Pub has recently opened a new area dedicated to "Gentleman's Entertainment" Offering a secluded & private place with lovely hostesses to keep you company and out of sight from the prying eyes of the local gossipers (& Wives).

CHA AM BALLOON CHASERS

MAGS MEANDERINGS: FROM SOM TAM TO MUSHY PEAS

IN THE BAG

The digital age phenomenon of online grocery shopping has been around in the UK for 12 years or so, and can be a godsend, especially for people who live in more rural areas or don't have transport. Now Tesco Lotus has announced that Bangkok is to be the first city in Thailand to benefit from their online shopping service.

Whether Bangkok is the best place for the launch remains to be seen. With delivery time slots pretty much the same as they have in the UK, between 10 am and 10 pm, it could prove difficult for their vans to keep even remotely to specified delivery times. You have to wonder if the UK based bosses have done their homework, and realise that many Thai people are up at the crack of dawn anyway to give alms.

But time will tell, and no doubt the service will be tailored to customers needs, as well as to the traffic conditions. I must admit my first reaction to the news was a vision of a Tesco Lotus delivery van negotiating KlongToey, but in reality most customers will probably be in the suburban housing sprawls of Chan Wattana and the like.

So you HuaHinians may now be able to look forward to the day when you can browse Tesco Lotus online, popping things into your virtual shopping basket before proceeding to the virtual checkout and clicking on your chosen delivery time slot. It really is that easy.

Except that in my own experience, admittedly with Tescos' UK rival Asda, it can take longer than finding things in store yourself - as if that weren't bad enough! And while it is great for buying non perishable items, there is one thing you can never do when online shopping for grocery's. You can never prod that mango, or delve to the back of the shelf for a fresher pack of butter.

You also end up with a mountain of plastic carrier bags. A few years ago a Farang run company very bravely attempted to tackle the issue of excessive plastic bag use in Thailand. If memory serves they were based in Phuket, and have not been heard of since.

If there are people routinely using degradable plastic or textile bags in the Land of Smiles I can only apologise for missing them, and applaud those who brought about the change for their dogged determination.

In the UK an estimated 157 plastic bags are used per person every year. If, like me, you are thinking that's only about 3 each per week, plus one over for Christmas, then it is likely you have been in Thailand for far too long. The fact is that while many in the UK do now try to use our textile 'bags for life', we also need our regular supply of plastic. We need it to contain all the other food packaging as it makes its way from kitchen to wheelie bin. And we must also segregate our waste to correspond with one of the three different coloured wheelie bins which adorn our yards. Householders in some areas have even more choice, with two kerbside bins in addition to their three wheelies. All colour coded but, of course, different Local Authority areas use different colours, which can be very confusing for people when they move house. But failure to comply with the rules governing what goes where can result in severe reprimands - or even fines - from the wheelie bin police.

The outcome of all this sorting, especially for those with small kitchens, is that they can very quickly begin to resemble indoor versions of landfill sites. And the biggest problem is obsessive food wrapping by retailers. Which is where Thailand, despite it's apparent over use of plastic bags, in some ways has it right. The Thai way of buying food fresh from the markets every day avoids the need for produce to be shrouded in plastic.

Here in the UK, as in many other countries where people are no longer in the habit of daily shopping, food is kept artificially 'fresh' in plastic cocoons which are pumped full of one gas or another. There is often a polystyrene tray as well, and a little blanket of material impregnated with yet another chemical compound.

No doubt Thai shopping habits will gradually go the same way as the rest. Meanwhile, if the truth were known, they are probably producing much less plastic waste per head than other more 'developed' countries.

FEATURED GAME

SATURDAY 11TH MAY 2013
THE FA CUP FINAL
Man City v Wigan 23:15
Wigan's Premiership life is hanging by a thread and with that on their minds it could affect their performance in this game; however it could be a positive thing and allow them to play without pressure, but also knowing that it will likely be their only chance of ever winning the FA Cup. City on the other hand are almost in a no win situation - if they win, it is only against lowly Wigan, and if they lose they will be torn apart by critics and fans. Logic says a City win, but we are going for the upset.

THROWING THE TOWEL IN

WEMBLEY STADIUM COVERED IN TOWELS

■ LONDON, ENGLAND

Officials at Wembley Stadium were stunned late last week to find that the seats throughout the stadium have been covered in German towels.

With Bayern Munich and Borussia Dortmund confirming their places in the Champions League final at Wembley later this month, German fans wasted no time in using their traditional method of reserving their preferred seats.

A Wembley spokesperson explained, "We're not sure when they did it, but they must have got up really early as they were all in place when we got here."

"The weird thing is there's not a German to be seen, it's like they've put their towels down and gone back to bed."

"All the best seats are gone, including six in the Royal box – the Windsors will be furious."

Reports that Prince Harry had borrowed an Apache helicopter and staged a commando raid to remove the towels have been vigorously denied by a spokesman for the Royal Family. "Prince Harry has not been anywhere near the stadium and is currently in the USA taking part in ~~a booze cruise~~ an official engagement."

Prime Minister David Cameron has not made any official comment, but is said to have made unofficial contact by phone with Angela Merkel offering to place a towel for her. UKIP leader Nigel Farage, unsurprisingly did comment, and stated that 'Do we never learn? It's like 1939 all over again - Poland was covered in towels the day before Germany invaded.'
