BEACH CLEAN UP ORGANISED BY LOCALS

■ HUA HIN, THAILAND

It has become quite a common complaint in recent years that Hua Hin Beach is not as clean as it should be, partially due to the amount of debris washed ashore from the numerous fishing boats, but also due to the litter habits of both Thais and foreigners. Now an enterprising group have started organising regular events to encourage volunteers to keep the beach clean, and the second such event takes place this Saturday 6th July, from 4.30 to 6pm, weather permitting.

The 2nd Hua Hin Cleaning Beach has been put together by iLikeHuaHin (website www.ilikehuahin.com) following their first mission at the beginning of June. They will provide gloves and plastic bags, and run the event as a game, where teams of three people work together, with the team collecting the most waste (measured in kilogrammes) getting the reward of a free drink for each participant of the winning team at the Ask For Moon Bar (beer, bacardi or soft drink).

The area to be cleaned is from the Hilton Hotel to Paleo Bar and back to Ask For Moon Bar (in front of Hilton Hotel), and everyone who wishes to join in should meet on the beach in front of the Hilton Hotel. After the clean up has finished and the winning team announced, the group can then go for some 'Chilling Time' at the Ask For Moon Bar, open until late. If the weather is unsuitable, the event will be postponed to the following Saturday, and this information will be on the group's Facebook page (www.facebook.com/iLikeHuaHin) so please check this before departing for the beach.

AWOL is delighted to support this effort, and encourages all our readers who are able, to join in and spread the word, as well as 'Liking' their Facebook page and visiting the iLikeHuaHin website.

TOURIST TRAP

By Roger Norwood

Since the days of Prime Minister Thaksin Shinawatra, and possibly before that too, Thailand has been on an almost obseesive pursuit to try and attract wealthy tourists to Thailand.

Just this week the Tourist Authority of Thailand (TAT) issued a press release stating that they wanted to attract more 'quality' tourists, part of their five day action plan workshop, as Thailand strives to reach a 2 trillion baht tourist revenue target by 2015.

Of course 'quality' really means a higher spend per head, but a lot of resident expats believe that this is a misguided strategy, and ignores a vast pool of tourists that Thailand used to attract in droves - budget conscious people and particularly backpackers. As one expat recently said to me, 'The backpackers who have a great time here when they are young, will return when they are wealthy, or with their own families'.

The strategy also has another major flaw - wealthy tourists expect a much higher standard from staff at hotels, as well as being put off by dirty beaches, litter, safety, packs of soi dogs and a number of other aspects that other tourist destinations are superior to Thailand in.

This goes beyond the realm of the TAT and is firmly the territory of the politicians and educators, who either feel that they cannot, or will not address these fundamentals of society that effect everyone. Many foreigners will put up with the negatives they discover in Thailand, as they are outweighed by the many positives, but wealthier tourists will generally not, and have an abundance of other places to choose from to spend their money.

Ironically, the advent of the ASEAN economic area in the next few years may well address some of the issues, as workers from the Phillipines, Vietnam, Malaysia and others could descend on Thailand, raising standards of hotel and other workers, and possibly influencing how Thais see things.

However Thailand does not have a good record of acting on the advice of outsiders, and this is also why their tourism strategy will persist regardless. Will they live to regret it?

■ SASKATCHEWAN, CANADA Diner leaves $10,000 tip after stopping off for burger and fries

A generous diner must have really enjoyed his meal after he left a $10,000 (£6,260) tip following his burger and fries.

Bob Erb stopped off for a bite to eat at the Old West Express diner in the province of Saskatchewan in Canada when he got talking to owner Clifford Luther.

The pair chatted for hours, with the restaurateur revealing his daughter living in British Columbia had just been diagnosed with cancer.

Lotter winner Erb, who was on his way to bury his father's ashes, returned to the diner five days later when he wrote out the generous cheque.

'He asked for a pen and said: "Here, you can just take the bill out of that,"' explained the shocked diner owner. 'It was a cheque for $10,000. He just kind of said "If you need to get out there quickly, this will help you."

'It just shows how good people can be you know, how, how he had good fortune and he was able to pass it on and I believe he's a very generous man.'

He added: 'It's really lifted my spirits. There are just some really caring people out there.'

■ USA Do you need a job and look like Adolf Hitler? Well, you could be in luck

Is your uncanny resemblance to Nazi dictator Adolf Hitler harming your job prospects? Well this might just be the role for you.Looking like one of the most hated men on the planet can't be easy, but that well-groomed moustache could soon be turned into some cold hard cash. The History Channel is looking for Hitler lookalikes, to star in a new documentary-drama series about WWI and WWII. Winston Churchill doppelgangers are also needed, as well as anyone who looks similar to former US president Franklin D. Roosevelt. No acting experience is necessary, with willing participants being offered between $350 (£195) a day for their time, plus expenses. 'The most important thing is a physical resemblance to the actual historical figures,' explains the job posting on classified advertisement website Craigslist. 'The majority of the cast will be tracked over decades, so we will be exploring the possibility of casting two people to play both young and 'old' versions. Previous acting experience is not required. German accent (for Hitler) and British accent (for Churchill) is also helpful, but also not required.'

A section for all you budding etymologists where each week the origin of a word or phrase is investigated.

This week it is..... Dumb blonde

A conspicuously attractive but stupid blonde woman.

This expression was first used, in the USA, in the 1920s. The 'stupid' meaning of the word 'dumb' has been more popular in America than in other parts of the English-speaking world, but it was first so used in England. 'Dumb blonde' is a disparaging term directed at a woman but the first 'dumb' people were men. The expression 'dumb ox' long predates 'dumb blonde' and was first applied to no less a luminary than the taciturn theologian Saint Thomas Aquinas. This nickname was probably influenced by Aquinas's quietness and as a corruption of the Latin 'Dom' (short for Dominus), a prefix given to religious dignitaries.

By the early 1920s various 'dumb' insults became fashionable and 'dumb ox' (for men) and 'dumb bunny' and 'dumb Dora' (for women) were in use in the US college scene. It didn't take long for wags to come up with 'dumb belle' as another. Here we'll take a little sideways journey to look at the origin of the word 'dumbbell'. We now know dumbbells as the handheld weights used in gyms. Rather an odd word when you think about it, but the following derivation provides the explanation.

When large wheel-mounted peals of bells were introduced into churches in the Middle Ages, it was found that ringing them was quite vigorous exercise. Strength and fitness were as valued then as it is now and people used the bells, with the clappers padded with cloth to stifle the ring, as an early form of fitness machine. They were 'dumb' bells, hence 'dumbbells'.

Back to 'dumb blondes'... 'Dumbbells' wasn't an entirely pointless tangent as 'dumb-bell blonde' was the initial form of 'dumb blonde' and 'dumb-dell Dora' was the first form of 'dumb Dora'. Both were found in US newspapers from around the mid-1920s, as in this example from the Iowa Citizen, December 1926: Many capable, loyal, reliable sweethearts and wives are deserted for the featherweights. Such a woman may be worth her weight in rubies; but if you're only a mere man you are going to to prefer any dumb-bell blonde.

The spread of 'dumb blonde' imagery was no doubt influenced by Anita Loos' popular novel Gentlemen Prefer Blondes, which had been published the previous year, and the description of Jean Harlow as the Blonde Bombshell in her 1933 film, although the phrase 'dumb blonde' doesn't actually occur in either.

■ AUSTRALIAN LOVE POEM

Of course I love ya darlin
You're a bloody top-notch bird
And when I say you're gorgeous
I mean every single word

So ya bum is on the big side
I don't mind a bit of flab
It means that when I'm ready
There's somethin' there to grab

So your belly isn't flat no more
I tell ya, I don't care
So long as when I cuddle ya
I can get my arms round there

No Sheila who is your age
Has nice round perky breasts
They just gave in to gravity
But I know ya did ya best

I'm tellin' ya the truth now
I never tell ya lies
I think it's very sexy
That you've got dimples on ya thighs

I swear on me nanna's grave now
The moment that we met
I thought you was as good as
I was ever gonna get

No matter what u look like
I'll always love ya dear
Now shut up while the cricket's on
And fetch another beer..

■ ASSAULT AND BATTERY

Just got back from Blackpool, never again!
On the seafront I saw a guy and woman having a shouting match until the woman smacked the guy in the head and they started fighting.
Then a copper turned up but instead of trying to calm things down he starts hitting the guy with his baton, in the end the guy gets the baton off the copper and starts hitting him AND his wife!
Then this crocodile turned up and stole all the sausages!

■ HAPPY WIFE

My wife woke with a massive smile on her face this morning.
I love felt tip pens.

■ LABOUR PAINS

Push harder" I said to my wife when she was in labour. "Go to hell" she screamed, which I thought was a bit harsh. It wasn't my fault the car broke down on the way to hospital...

MAGS MEANDERINGS: FROM SOM TAM TO MUSHY PEAS

SINGING FOR YOUR SUPPER

It is rare that I bother to watch the Eurovision Song Contest. The voting is predictable, Abba are so old that there is now a museum in their memory, and there hasn't been a decent UK entry since Sandie Shaw hobbled around in her bare feet. But purely in the interests of research, and nothing to do with the fact that there was little else worth watching and my local hostelry is boarded up, I sat through much of this year's contest.

It was certainly as predictable as expected.

Poor Bonnie Tyler did her best for the UK with a song which was decidedly more Eurovision than Bonnie. The Swedish presenter did a few costume changes, culminating with a huge dress resembling something a Disney Fairy Queen would wear to a ball, and there were some very strange pieces of choreography.

It made me recall how fortunate expats used to be in the days when most of us had to make do with cable TV. In the early 'noughties' we were happy enough with cable provision, despite its' tendency to switch farang news channels on a whim, or for the person in charge of the late movie to forget to put on the second disc. If there was anything important to watch, such as football, golf, football, formula one, football, or Wimbledon, certain bars in town were well equipped for satellite viewing. Expats would gather together to enjoy the event, and the Singha would flow. Happily never for Eurovision.

Perhaps the huge growth of expat home ownership in Hua Hin has led to the upsurge in satellite TV. After all, it really doesn't make much sense to install it in what could well be a temporary rented property. Or perhaps expats simply tired of cable with its' glitches and never ending repeats.

But the change must surely also contribute to the increase in expats who stay at home, rather than make the trip into town for a special sporting event as used to happen. Instead people can have a few friends and neighbours round and fire up the barbeque.

Talking of which, a surprising number of Brits in the UK really do have Eurovision parties at home. It's a close call deciding which is more sad - expats who stay home in Hua Hin, or Brits who have Eurovision parties. But not that close!

Staying with a similar theme, TV quiz and talent shows these days tend to follow pretty much the same format wherever you live. They even spawn movies, such as 'Slumdog Millionaire', and some of them, like the X Factor, attract an eclectic mix of judges.

The idea ostensibly is to provide a balance. The ideal panel of judges should contain celebrities who know a bit about what they are judging, while appealing to all age groups of viewers. There should also be one bad guy who marks harshly, and sits next to a bright young thing with cleavage whose job is to feel sorry for the next Susan Boyle wannabe to get voted out.

The latest of these shows is 'The Voice', which has dragged Tom Jones out of semi retirement. He is actually wearing quite well, and unlike Engelbert Humperdink, who clearly paid a visit to a hair colourist before failing so miserably at last years' Eurovision Song Contest, Sir Tom seems happy to be seen in all his grey glory, albeit with a pretty good year round tan. There does however seem to be a price to pay for this resurgence in his popularity, in the form of an illegitimate son.

The son - Jonathan Berkery, who prefers to be known as Jon Jones, is reported as saying that he fell into a life of crime because he was abandoned by his father. He became a gun toting drug dealer who slept rough, but now wants to pursue a career as a singer, and fantasises about appearing on The Voice. For a young man who clearly couldn't make enough from dealing drugs to provide himself with somewhere to live, and whose sense of abandonment is the result of an alleged 3 day affair between his mother and Sir Tom, the future really doesn't seem too bright. Maybe someone should tell him that being called Jones isn't any guarantee of success. Especially in Wales.

GEARS OF A CLOWN?

FORMULA 1 SWITCHES TO CLOWN CARS

■ SILVERSTONE, ENGLAND

RACING vehicle manufacturers are to base their designs on clown cars following the British Grand Prix.

After the race became momentarily interesting when bits flew off the cars, organisers have asked if the whole thing can fall apart by the fifth lap.

Engineer Tom Logan said: "Mercedes have said they want Lewis Hamilton to finish the race with nothing left of his vehicle but a big old-timey bulb car horn in one hand.

"It's a considerable challenge to design a car that can reach speeds of 200mph then have all four wheels fly off simultaneously making a 'ba-DOING' noise."

The circus-inspired Formula 1 cars will be assessed under intense comedic conditions, including a specially adapted wind tunnel that fires custard pies at 298mph.

Left: Michael Schumacher, Sebastian Vettel and Lewis Hamilton try out next season's cars before having a cream flan thrown in their faces.

Cockpits will be extended to accommodate up to twelve big-shoed drivers, including one who will spend the race upside down after misjudging his jump into the car.

Formula 1 fans' opposition to the move has been disregarded on the basis that they are Formula 1 fans and their opinion is therefore worthless.

Red Bull has already replaced Mark Webber with Jingles, a £6m signing from Zippos circus who can simultaneously steer and knot a balloon into the shape of a poodle.
