CLOCK TICKING FOR THAI TOURISM?

■ HUA HIN, THAILAND

With just 16 months to go until the scheduled start of the ASEAN Economic Community, a study by the Centre for International Trade Studies at the University of the Thai Chamber of Commerce has warned that Thailand's tourism sector is in danger of falling behind it's neighbours in key service areas. The study shows that ASEAN countries, especially Malaysia and Singapore, have seriously improved their tourism and hospitality services to draw more visitors. "Thailand needs to develop tourism services and improve hospitality so that the tourism industry can help increase the country's income during the slowdown in exports and domestic growth," Aat Pisanwanich, director of the Centre, said this week.

Foreign visitors are less satisfied than they once were with the "Siamese Smile", as many Thais, particularly people working in service businesses, look displeased, according to the study. The service industry should urgently improve its services and the attitude of its employees or the country could see fewer visitors in the future, the study found. Language skills were also highlighted as being a problem, and the study said that the public and private sectors need to encourage their employees to improve English, Chinese, Japanese, Korean and ASEAN languages.

Hua Hin is poised to be a significant beneficiary from tourism over the coming years, but the warnings in the study should be heeded here too, and Thais working in the tourism sector may find their jobs under threat from workers coming here from other ASEAN nations unless they do so. The strong baht has also taken it's toll on tourism with Thailand no longer regarded as a cheap destination by Europeans and Americans.

VIVE LA DIFFERENCE!

By Roger Norwood

Some readers might think that this column suggests that both myself and other contributors don't like Thailand or the Thai people, because of the criticisms that regularly appear here of both. I would like to state that this is not the case, and that life in Thailand is as close to perfect as anyone is likely to find anywhere in the world.

I have mentioned before the brickbat that is frequently thrown by foreigners at other foreigners who dare to criticise the land they have made their home, and occasionally Thais will also utter the 'why don't you leave?' response with slightly more justification, but both fail to realise that it is because we love Thailand, and love living here, that we would like to improve things, not just for ourselves but for everyone.

It is an odd comparison, but when British people hear some general criticism of the UK or it's people, more often than not they will nod their heads sagely in agreement, acknowledging that things could and should be improved, regardless of whether the speaker is British or foreign. In fact the Brits have a track record of mocking their own country and some of the peculiar foibles and character traits of the people, as well as many of it's most famous people.

While Thais do make fun of themselves, there is a certain reserve about it, and largely the rich and famous tend to be revered and left alone, whereas they are prime targets as far as the British go.This could in part be due to the concept of karma for the Thais, or the more basic idea of politeness, and it strikes me that this could be one of the fundamental reasons why so many foreigners love Thailand and the Thai people, and also why it is so shocking when they do not display the gentleness and forgiving we are so used to.

The differences in Thailand are what makes it unique, and we should all remember that however frustrating life here can be sometimes, we should be careful in not trying too hard to change either attitudes or behaviours, as it might end up ruining what we love.

■ DIEPHOLZ, GERMANY 6.5m baht damage to rented house after inflatable mattress explodes

Spare a thought for this German man, whose house move went from bad to worse after a mattress he was trying to inflate violently blew up – landing him with a huge repair bill. The 41-year-old, who has not been named, was thrown across the room as the explosion blew out all the doors and windows of the building.

Having moved to a new town, the man bought an inflatable mattress to sleep on temporarily. After realising that the mattress was punctured, he used an industrial strength puncture repair spray and tyre sealant. Unbeknownst to him, however, the product caused a violent reaction when heated by the built-in motor pump.

The explosion chucked him across the room, blasted out windows and ripped doors from their hinges, causing €150,000 (6.5m baht) worth of damage – in a property that's not his. The man had to be taken to hospital and was treated for minor cuts and an injured wrist.

The house, located in the town of Diepholz in Lower Saxony, only had shards of glass left in the window frames, while tiles from the roof were scattered on the floor and curtains were ripped from their poles.

Things could now get even worse for the man, after unsympathetic prosecutors said they were considering taking legal action against him.

■ DAFENG, CHINA One million cockroaches on the loose after breaking out of farm

Having one or two cockroaches inside your house is annoying enough but try having to contend with the million roaches which have reportedly escaped from a farm in China. The insects, which were going to be used for traditional medicine, are thought to have absconded from an institution in Dafeng. They are now reportedly nesting in cornfields that surround the farm in the city located in the eastern province of Jiangsu.

The pests are thought to have got loose after an unidentified person destroyed part of the greenhouse they were being kept in. Wang Pengsheng, who owns the farm, could now lose tens of thousands of pounds after spending half a year mastering his business plan.

Chinese authorities have not yet figured out how they're going to deal with the large number of escaped cockroaches, but five investigators have been sent to the location to formulate a plan.

■ A section for all you budding etymologists where each week the origin of a word or phrase is investigated.
This week it is..... Black sheep of the family
A disreputable or disgraced member of a family.
Old joke alert - let's just get this out of the way before we begin:
Yokel 1: "Why do black sheep eat less than white sheep?".
Yokel 2: "There aren't as many of them."
The black sheep of the family'Black sheep' is rather an odd phrase to choose to epitomise worthlessness. Why sheep? Badgers, dolphins, pandas and penguins, which are all primarily black, are considered cute. First thoughts might suggest that it came about because of the linking of black things with bad things, which is a long standing allusion in English texts - black mood, black looks or even the Black Country. It may also be because shepherds disliked black sheep as their fleeces weren't suitable for dying and so were worth less than those of white sheep.
In fact, it is more likely to have derived from a bit of misinterpretation by the writers of early English Bibles. Myles Coverdale's 1535 Bible, which was the first complete bible printed in English, renders Genesis 30:32 as: 'All blacke shepe amonge the lambes' which Coverdale had translated from a German source text. Like bloggers and web publishers these days, the writers of early bibles copied from each other without checking their sources. Other bibles have the text as 'all the browne cattell among the sheepe' or 'every speckled and spotted sheep and every black lamb'. In the original texts, the Genesis 30:32 story is that the shepherd Jacob suggested that he remove any spotted, dark or otherwise identifiable sheep or goats from his master's flock in order to be able to later demonstrate that he hadn't stolen any white ones. The 'black sheep' were actually a mark of integrity rather than disrepute. The 'Chinese whispers' of the early bible versions caused the original meaning to become lost and confused readers into the belief that the dark sheep were removed because they were worthless.
The first record of 'black sheep' in a derogatory sense found in print is from an English Puritan who emigrated to America in 1635, the appropriately named Thomas Shepard, in the evangelical text The Sincere Convert, 1640:
Cast out all the Prophane people among us, as drunkards, swearers, whores, lyers, which the Scripture brands for blacke sheepe, and condemnes them in a 100. places.
Meanwhile, back in England, black sheep maintained the same status as black cats. The long-standing English country tradition that black sheep are omens of good fortune remained until the 19th century. The Folk-Lore Record, 1878, included this piece:
"We speak figuratively of the one black sheep that is the cause of sorrow in a family; but in its reality it is regarded by the Sussex shepherd as an omen of good luck to his flock."
Baa, Baa, Black Sheep is one of the oldest English nursery rhymes and was first printed in Tommy Thumb's Pretty Song Book, circa 1744 and is certainly much older than the 18th century. The original printed form is almost the same as the version familiar today:
Bah, Bah a black Sheep, Have you any Wool?
Yes merry have I, Three Bags full,
One for my master,
One for my Dame,
One for the little Boy
That lives down the lane
Like most nursery rhymes, the interpretation of the text is a source of debate. It has been suggested in recent years that it contains a racial slur which, to this reader at least, seems speculative and based on little more than it includes the word 'black'. If there is a negative connotation it is that the rhyme may refer to the unpopular export tax on wool imposed in 1275.
That country lore was overtaken by the figurative use of the 'black sheep' that we now commonly use.

■ CARELESS TALK COSTS.....

A husband and wife are sitting quietly in bed reading when the wife looks over at him and asks the question...
WIFE: "What would you do if I died? Would you get married again?"
HUSBAND: "Definitely not!"
WIFE: "Why not? Don't you like being married?"
HUSBAND: "Of course I do."
WIFE: "Then why wouldn't you remarry?"
HUSBAND: "Okay, okay, I'd get married again."
WIFE: "You would?" (with a hurt look)
HUSBAND: Audible groan
WIFE: "Would you live in our house?"
HUSBAND: "Sure, it's a great house."
WIFE: "Would you sleep with her in our bed?"
HUSBAND: "Where else would we sleep?"
WIFE: "Would you let her drive my car?"
HUSBAND: "Probably, it is almost new."
WIFE: "Would you replace my pictures with hers?"
HUSBAND: "That would seem like the proper thing to do."
WIFE: "Would you give her my jewelry?"
HUSBAND: "No, I'm sure she'd want her own."
WIFE: "Would she use my golf clubs?"
HUSBAND: "No, she's left-handed."
WIFE: Silence.....

Doctor: I've been trying to reach you since yesterday.

A man had been feeling sick for quite some time and finally decided to see a doctor. The doctor came out and told the patient that he has some bad news to share. "You are going to die," he said.
"When will I die?" the patient asked.
"Ten," the doctor replied.
The patient, wondering, asked, "Ten what? Years, months, days ...? Tell me doc, I gotta know."
"Nine," the doctor said.

MAGS MEANDERINGS: FROM SOM TAM TO MUSHY PEAS

MILKING THE APPLAUSE

Our female readers will understand why, now and than, a visit to the hairdresser is needed. And how an update on the hairdressers' life is inevitably all part of the deal. It's just one of the things which us women have to tolerate in order to rid ourselves of those dreaded split ends.

So when my own hairdresser was planning his wedding, his customers were regaled with regular progress reports on everything from the choice of venue, to the colour of those awful flounces they use to camouflage the sorry state of the chairs.

No-one was spared the most minute detail, from the construction of the cake (a pyramid of 80 champagne flavoured cup cakes) to the choice of matching tiepins for the main men. Brochures showing the venue - a stately home standing on it's own picturesque island some 60 miles away from where any of the guests lived - were displayed in the salon.

In fact a fairly typical British 21st Century wedding, but worse was to come.

After such a momentous occasion it was reasonable to expect a little feedback when the next grooming session came around. Perhaps even a photograph or twelve. So it was quite disconcerting to find a digital photo frame on the shelf in front of me while the next bout of snipping and blow drying was going on.

'It holds 800 pictures' my hairdresser proudly declared, at which point I gave up all hope of browsing through a year old copy of the Ikea catalogue and thanked Buddha that I hadn't booked for a more time consuming procedure.

Of course in this digital age every minute of a wedding day is recorded for posterity, from bridal preparations right through to the latest trend - trashing the wedding dress at the end - which can be achieved by spray painting the bride, or standing her in a muddy lake.

Even photos of new babies have reached another dimension. Every expectant grandparent with a smart phone now looks forward to receiving a digital image of the 20 week scan.

If it weren't for the tradition of pink for girls and blue for boys I would have enough trouble distinguishing the sex of new born babies. Show me a picture of a cute little bundle in yellow and I simply don't have a clue. So to be proudly shown a black and white image of a foetus presents a whole new social dilemma. You can't really exclaim 'oh it looks just like its' Dad' or 'what a bonny little foetus!' while constructive comments such as 'should that foot be in that position?' are probably best left unsaid.

The 21st century has brought with it another 'baby etiquette' dilemma, with controversy raging in the UK over breast feeding - or rather what locations are acceptable for that purpose. With public opinion already divided the debate reached new heights when a mother was spotted breast feeding her infant in the shallow end of a public swimming pool, and was ordered to leave the premises. Hopefully she was allowed to get dried and dressed first, but whatever your views on the subject there does seem to be a growing need for guidelines.

Brits - and those from other western countries - are all too familiar with signs which tell us that certain activities are not allowed. Most commonly found on public transport, the range of white signs with red borders and diagonal red stripes across images of banned activities is already quite extensive. As well as the obligatory image of a smoking cigarette, signs depicting beefburgers, hot drinks, i players, ghetto blasters and dogs can also be found in abundance. Perhaps one day soon 'no breast feeding' will be added, although it is unlikely to be needed in Thailand where women tend to be quite discreet in public.

Which brings to mind an incident some years ago at a bar in Pattaya, where one of the girls had returned to work very soon after giving birth. She was a popular girl with the customers, and quickly became known as 'gold top'.

CAPRICORN DEC 22 - JAN 19

All of your questions will be answered this week, moments after the zookeeper, the fire marshal, and the roller-coaster operator all tell you, "No."

AQUARIUS JAN 20 – FEB 18

The attention is nice and all, but in the end, you put your pants on just like everyone else: One thirty million dollar cybernetic leg at a time.

PISCES FEB 19 – MAR 20

What's the matter? Couldn't find your precious People magazine horoscopes this week? Oh, you want your fortune, do you? Here's your fortune: Go die, asshole.

ARIES MAR 21 – APR 20

Try listening to your body this week. It's got a bunch of really great stories about hanging out with Jimmy Page.

TAURUS APR 21 – MAY 21

Sure, they might blame you now, but how were you supposed to know the waters were unsafe at Everyone Always Gets Killed Beach.

GEMINI MAY 22 – JUNE 21

After days of searching, you'll finally find comfort this week. Just above "comforter," and right below "confit."

CANCER JUN 22 – JUL 22

Internal bleeding is usually a sign of serious trauma, so relax, you and your blood-soaked clothes are totally fine.

LEO JUL 23 – AUG 22

By this time next year, you'll be 400,000 dollars richer, two cars the better, and just as gullible as you are now.

VIRGO AUG 23 – SEP 22

Sometimes in life you just have to march right in there, introduce yourself, fight off a couple of rather large security guards, and demand a raise.

LIBRA SEP 23 – OCT 23

Remember: Guns aren't toys. Except for the plastic toy kind. Or the high-powered rifle kind, which you can totally use to have a ton of fun.

SCORPIO OCT 24 – NOV 21

Your two pack-a-day habit will finally kill you this week, but then, that's a lot of wolves to fight off.

SAGITTARIUS NOV 22 – DEC 21

The stars foresee a time of great uncertainty in the day to come. Also, the stars foresee a time of great covering their collective asses in the days to come.

FOOTBALL MATCHES RUINING MAGIC OF TRANSFER MARKET

■ LONDON, ENGLAND

FOOTBALL fans are furious that matches are diverting attention away from the transfer market.

They want games in the Premier League to be put on hold so they can focus on their true passion, the pure thrills of the player marketplace.

Chelsea fan Donna Sheridan said: "A goal, three points, top of the league, who cares? All I want to know is who's triggering whose contractual buyout clause.

"How am I expected to pay attention to the game when I know the incredible spectacle of who owns Roberto Soldado's image rights is being played out behind the scenes?"

Football agents, their paid shills in the media, and players all agree that who's employing who is more exciting than wasting time kicking a ball.

Left: The highlight of the season for most football fans is the site of a Sky Sports reporter outside Spurs' training ground telling everyone about another failed deal for the club

A leading Chelsea manager, speaking anonymously, said: "The most elegant approach would be to total every club's wage bill and the money they've spent on transfers, and the highest gross wins the title.

"If football wants to be taken seriously, then it needs to take the cameras from the grass to the boardroom."

Spurs fan Wayne Hayes said: "The last day of August is enthralling – last-minute swoops, botched medicals, helicopters to eleventh-hour signings. Then unfortunately the fun's over until January 1st."
