WASHED OUT

UNPRECEDENTED RAINFALL WREAKS HAVOC

HUA HIN, THAILAND

The Hua Hin area is historically one of the driest regions in Thailand, and normally escapes the annual monsoon fairly lightly, but the rainfall last weekend broke the mould as fas as history goes.

In a twenty four hour period beginning on Saturday evening, it has been reported that seventy centimetres of rain fell, breaking a record set some twenty three years ago, and leaving Hua Hin residents and businesses counting the cost. The region has been saturated for months already in what has been a very unusual year as far as the weather goes, so the deluge quickly started to cause problems, which were exacerbated by the two high tides and one relatively high low tide.

South of the town centre suffered most, but any lower lying areas were affected, and the regular 'hotspots' for flooding such as outside Market Village, Sois 102, 94 and 88 and Soi Binthabaht were over forty centimetres deep in places. Some areas also suffered power cuts, and the army were called in to the worst affected areas.

As the rains have subsided and the water has drained away, there is ample evidence of the damage they have caused, with pot holes having appeared in many places, notably where several sois meet Phetkasem Road; drivers should take care as these are quite large on some roads. While few drainage systems in the world could cope with the volume of water dropped in such a short space of time, credit must be given to the work carried out in recent years to improve this in Hua Hin which saw the town return to normal fairly quickly, unlike some other areas of Thailand which are still suffering. The hope is that we have now seen off the worst and can look forward to a drier and more normal weather pattern.

JOBS FOR THE BOYS

By Roger Norwood

Many foreigners in the last thirty to forty years have departed their home countries and ended up settling in Thailand, some as retirees on decent pensions or veterans from the military, others who got fed up with their lives at home, and still more who moved here with the company they worked for.

One of the main attractions for settling here historically has been that you can live well relatively cheaply in comparison to 'back home', and while that is still true to some extent, the gap has narrowed considerably in the relative costs of living.

This has led to more expats looking for, or considering, finding gainful employment, and a choice to be made between doing so in Thailand or their home country.

Both options present problems; many expats are middle aged or retirees, and so would find it hard to find decent paying jobs at home, aside from the unwanted departure from Thailand, while there is an equally limited number of jobs that expats are allowed to do in Thailand. Without question the number one choice available is teaching English, but this officially requires certain qualifications, although being a native speaker can sometimes be enough. Beyond this though you would need to be an expertly qualified (or experienced) individual to even have a hope of either getting a job or the necessary work permit.

The regulations regarding the work foreigners are allowed to do are extensive and stringently enforced, and the amount of paperwork to be completed is daunting, although schools and companies will often handle this for you.

The difficulty in getting work here helps to explain why many either become 'part time' expats, doing contract work outside of the country, or opt to set up a business which they hope can generate the income they would like (or need). The pitfalls of that last option could fill another ten columns but ultimately it is often the best path, as long as you have a trustworthy Thai partner.

■ SWANSEA, UK Mother haunted by childhood phobia of The Muppet Show

Most people have fond childhood memories of Kermit The Frog, Miss Piggy and Fozzie Bear. But even the thought of The Muppet Show terrifies mother-of-two Lindsay Broom. She has suffered from a phobia of puppets – called automatonophobia – since she was five.

'All it takes is for my husband, Alex, to hum The Muppets theme song and I'm a wreck,' she said. 'When I see them, I automatically imagine the puppets' facial features twisting and distorting, I just have to get away from them.'

The 37-year-old's phobia dates back to when she bought a rabbit hutch with her mother and was left 'in a dark room' inside the seller's house with an elderly woman.

'The elderly woman didn't say a word, but was obviously unwell. She sat there groaning and wheezing as an episode of The Muppets was playing on the TV,' she explained.

While there is no known cure for automatonophobia, possible treatments include hypnosis, psychoanalysis therapy and medication. But Mrs Broom said: 'I haven't sought medical advice – the phobia is so specialised that I can't imagine anyone will be able to help me.'

■ BIRMINGHAM, UK Meet the woman who likes a wee drink

The next time you're feeling thirsty why not try a pint of urine? One lady has apparently been enjoying the beverage every day for the past 20 years. Sylvia Chandler has attributed her slender figure, 'youthful' looks and good health to the waste liquid.

The 63-year-old said the reason she hadn't seen a doctor in more than ten years was because of her unusual habit.

'Drinking my own urine has kept me healthy and energised. And it helps me stay young – men are often surprised when I tell them my age,' she told Closer magazine. 'I have a glass of urine in the morning and another couple during the day. It tastes delicious – it's a bit like water, but sweeter. I haven't been to the doctor in a decade. I never get colds and I've maintained my size 10 figure.'

As well as consuming urine orally she also uses it to tend to any burns she may suffer, and claimed it has healing qualities. She also admitted to cleaning her face and hair with it too. But the Birmingham health store owner did confess she had had to wean herself onto it slowly and at first mixed it with cranberry juice.

■ A section for all you budding etymologists where each week the origin of a word or phrase is investigated. This week it is.....Raining cats and dogs

Raining very heavily.

This is an interesting phrase because there's no definitive origin, but there is a likely derivation. There are some fanciful proposed derivations to dismiss first though.

The phrase isn't related to the well-known antipathy between dogs and cats, which is exemplified in the phrase 'fight like cat and dog'. Nor is the phrase in any sense literal, that is, it doesn't record an incident where cats and dogs fell from the sky. Small creatures, of the size of frogs or fish, do occasionally get carried skywards in freak weather. Impromptu involuntary flight must also happen to dogs or cats from time to time, but there's no record of it occurring in groups causing this phrase to be coined.

One supposed origin is that the phrase derives from mythology. Dogs and wolves were attendants to Odin, the god of storms, and sailors associated them with rain. Witches, who often took the form of their familiars - cats, are supposed to have ridden the wind. Well, some evidence would be nice. There doesn't appear to be any to support this notion.

It has also been suggested that cats and dogs were washed from roofs during heavy weather. This is a widely repeated tale. It got a new lease of life with the e-mail message "Life in the 1500s", which began circulating on the Internet in 1999. Here's the relevant part of that:

I'll describe their houses a little. You've heard of thatch roofs, well that's all they were. Thick straw, piled high, with no wood underneath. They were the only place for the little animals to get warm. So all the pets; dogs, cats and other small animals, mice, rats, bugs, all lived in the roof. When it rained it became slippery so sometimes the animals would slip and fall off the roof. Thus the saying, "it's raining cats and dogs."

This is nonsense of course. It hardly needs debunking but, lest there be any doubt, let's do that anyway. In order to believe this tale we would have to accept that dogs lived in thatched roofs, which, of course, they didn't. Even accepting that bizarre idea, for dogs to have slipped off when it rained they would have needed to be sitting on the outside of the thatch - hardly the place an animal would head for as shelter in bad weather.

Another suggestion is that 'raining cats and dogs' comes from a version of the French word 'catadoupe', meaning waterfall. Again, no evidence. If the phrase were just 'raining cats', or even if there also existed a French word 'dogadoupe', we might be going somewhere with this one. As there isn't, let's pass this by.

There's a similar phrase originating from the North of England - 'raining stair-rods'. No one has gone to the effort of speculating that this is from mythic reports of stairs being carried into the air in storms and falling on gullible peasants. It's just a rather expressive phrase giving a graphic impression of heavy rain - as is 'raining cats and dogs'.

The much more probable source of 'raining cats and dogs' is the prosaic fact that, in the filthy streets of 17th/18th century England, heavy rain would occasionally carry along dead animals and other debris. The animals didn't fall from the sky, but the sight of dead cats and dogs floating by in storms could well have caused the coining of this colourful phrase. Jonathan Swift described such an event in his satirical poem 'A Description of a City Shower', first published in the 1710 collection of the Tatler magazine. The poem was a denunciation of contemporary London society and its meaning has been much debated. While the poem is metaphorical and doesn't describe a specific flood, it seems that, in describing water-borne animal corpses, Swift was referring to an occurrence that his readers would have been well familiar with:

Now in contiguous Drops the Flood comes down,
Threat'ning with Deluge this devoted Town.
Now from all Parts the swelling Kennels flow,
And bear their Trophies with them as they go:
Filth of all Hues and Odours seem to tell
What Street they sail'd from, by their Sight and Smell.
They, as each Torrent drives, with rapid Force,
From Smithfield or St. Pulchre's shape their Course,
And in huge Confluent join'd at Snow-Hill Ridge,
Fall from the Conduit, prone to Holbourn-Bridge.
Sweeping from Butchers Stalls, Dung, Guts, and Blood,
Drown'd Puppies, stinking Sprats, all drench'd in Mud,
Dead Cats and Turnip-Tops come tumbling down the Flood.

The phrase was in use in a modified form in 1653, when Richard Brome's comedy The City Wit or The Woman Wears the Breeches referred to stormy weather with the line: "It shall raine... Dogs and Polecats".

Polecats aren't cats as such but the jump between them in linguistic rather than veterinary terms isn't large and it seems clear that Broome's version was essentially the same phrase. The first appearance of the currently used version is in Jonathan Swift's A Complete Collection of Polite and Ingenious Conversation in 1738: "I know Sir John will go, though he was sure it would rain cats and dogs".

That Swift had alluded to the streets flowing with dead cats and dogs previously and now used 'rain cats and dogs' explicitly is good evidence that poor sanitation was the source of the phrase as we now use it.

■ PRINCE CHARLES AND THE HOOKER

Prince Charles decided to take up jogging.
Every day, he'd jog past a hooker standing on the same street corner.
He learned to brace himself as he approached her for what was almost certain to follow..
'One hundred and fifty pounds!' she'd shout from the curb.
'No! Five pounds!' He would fire back, just to shut her up.
This ritual between him and the hooker became a daily occurrence.
He'd run by and she'd yell, 'One hundred and Fifty pounds!'
He'd yell back, 'Five pounds!'
One day, Camilla decided that she wanted to accompany her 'husband' on his jog.
As the jogging couple neared the working woman's street corner,
Prince Charles realised she'd bark her £150 offer and Camilla would wonder what he'd really been doing on all his past outings.
He figured he'd better have a good explanation for his Wife.
As they jogged into the turn that would take them past the corner, he became even more apprehensive than usual.
Sure enough, there was the hooker. He tried to avoid the prostitute's eyes as she watched the pair jog past.
Then, from her corner, the hooker yelled:
'See what you get for five pounds, you tight git?!'

■ MEDICAL

Just been for a medical and the doctor said, "Don't eat anything fatty."
I said, "What? Like sausages and burgers and stuff?"
He said, "No fatty, don't eat anything!"

■ CRUMPLED

"Have you ever seen Twenty Pounds all crumpled up?"... the woman asked her husband.
"No"...said her husband.
She gave him a sexy little smile, unbuttoned the top 3 or 4 buttons of her blouse...and slowly reached down into the cleavage created by a soft, silky push-up bra...and pulled out a crumpled Twenty Pound note.
He took the crumpled Twenty Pound note from her ..... and smiled approvingly.
"Have you ever seen Fifty Pounds all crumpled up?"... she then asked her husband?
"Uh...no, I haven't" ...he said (with an anxious tone in his voice).
She gave him another sexy little smile, pulled up her skirt, and seductively reached into her tight, sheer panties... and pulled out a crumpled Fifty Pound note.
He took the crumpled Fifty Note... and started breathing a little quicker with anticipation..
"Now" .....she said. "Have you ever seen £30,000 Pounds all crumpled up?"
"No way" ...he said (while obviously becoming even more aroused... and excited).
"Well go look in the garage!"...she said.

WHO'S COUNTING?

Like the UK, Thailand conducts a population census every 10 years, and has since 1910. The data gathered helps to determine the population, and also how they live. Their social and economic group, education levels, type of employment, and the kind of housing they occupy. Also like the UK census, the information is used to measure change and to plan for the future. How occupations are changing, where housing, schools, health care, public transport etc will be needed.

The UK census began in 1801, but until 1851 only very basic information was recorded. Since then the census has provided an increasing amount of data which, as well as helping to determine demographic change and population movement, has become a valuable research tool for family historians.

But the UK census has always had it's faults. It records only people who are present in any given property on the night of the census itself, and gives no indication of movements, changes in occupation, or deaths during the intervening years. It is also a laborious and time consuming job, as anyone who has worked on gathering the information will know. Not least it is proving to be pretty unreliable, with an estimated shortfall of 1 million people in 2001, while the 2011 census is reckoned to have detected half a million immigrants who had slipped all other record keeping nets.

So the UK census is to be scrapped, and alternative methods of keeping tabs on some 63 million people are being considered. Given the amount of data already collected by the UK Government you wouldn't think the task would be too hard. Electoral Registers have to be completed annually by every household. The Inland Revenue, National Health Service, Department of Work and Pensions, Land Registry, schools, universities and Local Authorities all keep records, and all births, marriages and deaths have to be notified by law.

Thailand, with four other countries bordering it, and land area of more than double the UK - with much of it rural - could be forgiven for estimating its population at 65.5 million in 2010. The UK, surrounded by sea, and with twice as long to practice its' head counts, should have got it right by now.

Who knows what the new system will be, but experience tells us that whatever it is may well be contracted out to a private company. Google may be preparing its' bid as we speak.

CAPRICORN DEC 22 - JAN 19

Twins are often able to sense when the other is in danger, but you'll continue punching yours in the face long after he's dead.

AQUARIUS JAN 20 – FEB 18

It's not easy being a woman these days, what with you calling them up all the time and repeatedly begging for a second chance.

PISCES FEB 19 – MAR 20

Skunks are known to spray whenever they feel cornered, though why you decided to approach them with your latest screenplay idea is anyone's guess.

ARIES MAR 21 – APR 20

They say that God lives inside each and every one of us. Keep digging away until you find Him.

TAURUS APR 21 – MAY 21

Your fear and distrust of banks will result in you keeping all of your money, blood, and sperm beneath your mattress.

GEMINI MAY 22 – JUNE 21

Sometimes it's not so much what you say, but how you say it. Also, whether you're naked, high on methamphetamines, and standing in an abandoned parking lot at the time.

CANCER JUN 22 – JUL 22

In nature, bright and iridescent colours are usually a warning sign to stay away, which explains why you're still single after all these years.

LEO JUL 23 – AUG 22

The stars know this relationship isn't always easy, baby, but give it a chance. They promise you won't regret it.

VIRGO AUG 23 – SEP 22

This week, take a deep breath, look straight into the mirror, and release Bloody Mary from her otherworldly imprisonment.

LIBRA SEP 23 – OCT 23

You'll find profound beauty in the hideous and the grotesque this week, you perverted freak.

SCORPIO OCT 24 – NOV 21

Never underestimate the power of suggestion. Neither this morning, nor later this afternoon, when you're busy washing the stars' truck.

SAGITTARIUS NOV 22 – DEC 21

What you first believe to be identity theft will soon turn out to be just another self-righteous asshole with commitment issues.

CATCHING A BREAK

NEW 'JOE HART' VACCINATION COULD PREVENT PUBLIC CATCHING ANYTHING AT ALL

■ MANCHESTER, ENGLAND

Scientists believe they are close to a cure for all illnesses based on Man City goalkeeper Joe Hart's inability to catch anything at all.

As well as managing to steer clear of footballs, experts have also noticed that Hart's inability to catch stuff extends to colds, influenza and his own sneezes.

And medics claim that Hart's genes may hold the secret to avoiding things like the winter vomiting bug or losing 3-1 at home to Bayern Munich.

Experts point to the case of a 40 year-old City fan with Shingles whose autograph book was dropped by Hart and who later emerged from the encounter with Shingles Lite.

Flu expert John Goodier said, "Things are at a very early stage, but you may only need to be on the same losing team as Hart to avoid things like tonsillitis, whooping cough and The Clap."

Left: Joe Hart is working flat out to help perfect the vaccine, which scientists are hoping could be available as drops

"Our research suggests that the only thing Joe has managed to successfully hold on to in the last twelve months is a shampoo endorsement deal."

City fan Simon Williams said, "Finishing bottom of your group in the Champions League, or having an endless catalogue of poor health, infections and bowel complaints – it's a no brainer."

Goodier added, "We did invite Joe down to the lab to take part in some further tests, but he was unable to catch a taxi."
