FESTIVE WISHES

WHAT DOES HUA HIN WANT FOR CHRISTMAS?

■ HUA HIN, THAILAND

Wherever you are in the world, December is always a special time, whether you celebrate Christmas or not, as it marks the end of another year for the majority of the world. Thailand does not officially celebrate Christmas, although you wouldn't realise it from a visit to Market Village, but like many countries Christmas has gradually imposed itself here. In that spirit, our front page this week is a letter to Santa Claus, asking for presents that may or may not be delivered for all in the Hua Hin area. In no particular order and to no body in particular, here is AWOL's Christmas Wish List;

Better planning/implementation/information of road improvements;
Run more extensive and later operating local public transport;
Install sufficient and affordable city centre parking spaces;
New public parks and spaces in the centre of the city;
Generate a 'Keep Hua Hin Tidy' campaign, with more public bins;

Pedestrianise most of the 'Binthablock' area;
Erect automatic barriers on all unmanned railway crossings;
A boardwalk/promenade running next to the beach;
City water for everyone, on demand, all the time;
Enforce road rules for all road users, not just cars and trucks.

We are sure that there are many other things our readers wish for - why not share them with others on the AWOL Forum? In the meantime we hope everybody has a wonderful time at Christmas - we will be back next week with our last issue of 2014.

■ A section for all you budding etymologists where each week the origin of a word or phrase is investigated.

This week it is..... Annus horribilis
A horrible year.

Derived from the Latin phrase 'annus mirabilis' - year of wonders (or miracles). Recorded since the mid 1980's but brought into popular use after Queen Elizabeth II used it to describe 1992 - the year that the marriages of her two sons Charles and Andrew broke down and Windsor Castle caught fire.

John Dryden used the term 'annus mirabilis' in the title of his epic poem Annus Mirabilis: the year of wonders 1666. The poem was published in 1667 and commemorates the English defeat of the Dutch naval fleet and the Great Fire of London. Dryden apparently considered the fact that much of London was spared from the fire and Charles II's plans for a speedy restoration of the burned districts as a sign that God had performed miracles for England. He seems not to have been swayed in his 'year of wonders' opinion by the continuing Great Plague, which killed 20% of London's population (and which he was well aware of and left London to avoid). Looking back, The Great Fire of London and bubonic plague in the same year seems more horribilis than mirabilis, but Dryden had the advantage of living through it, so he should know.

The earliest citation of 'annus horribilis' in print is from a report in The Guardian, March 1985:

"Unlike the earlier Kostelec stories, however, The Engineer of Human Souls was written in exile in Toronto, where he was driven by the annus mirabilis, annus horribilis of 1968..."

The phrase came to a wide audience in Queen Elizabeth II's Christmas message in 1992, where she said:

"1992 is not a year I shall look back on with undiluted pleasure. In the words of one of my more sympathetic correspondents, it has turned out to be an 'annus horribilis'".

That sympathetic correspondent was Sir Edward William Spencer Ford, GCVO, KCB, ERD, DL, a former Assistant Private Secretary to the Queen and previously to her father King George VI. He may well have been harking back to the 1666 'annus mirabilis', rather than picking it up from the Guardian report or other uses of the phrase between 1985 and 1992. The link between the Great Fire of London and the fire at Windsor Castle, which had taken place just a few days earlier, is quite easy to make. Whatever route the phrase took, it has now been added to the list of Latin phrases that have been adopted into English.

Kofi Annan, then Secretary-General of the UN, used the phrase in a speech on 21st December 2004:

"There's no doubt that this has been a particularly difficult year, and I am relieved that this annus horribilis is coming to an end."

This was generally supposed to have been a reference to questions concerning his and his son's alleged involvement in the UN's Oil for Food Programme. Of course, Annan couldn't have known that the worst disaster of the year was yet to come when, on December 26th, the Indian Ocean tsunami killed almost a quarter of a million people.

You've always thought of yourself as the ultimate cat person, but you'll change your mind this week after meeting the 7 feet of man and whiskers that is Big Meow Johnson.

PISCES Feb 19 – Mar 20

You'll show the world just how good an infant car seat can be once you cast aside petty concerns like cost and safety.

TAURUS Apr 21 – May 21
It's not true that opening the dictionary to "loser" shows your picture, but for some reason they're still using it for "anteater," "caisson," and "dumbass."

Sadly, it turns out that of all the people you've ever known, the only one who has your best interests at heart is comedian Katt Williams.

We don't get to choose the person we fall in love with, as is obvious from the human pile of garbage you'll be following around with roses and candy this week.

■ MODERN CHRISTMAS CRACKER JOKES

UK TV channel Gold ran a poll for people to vote for the top ten modern Christmas cracker jokes, with more than two thousand British adults participating and voting on a shortlist compiled by a panel of judges. The jokes were selected from those submitted by amateur wits and comedians, as they were challenged to write their own jokes to liven up the usual offerings after previous research revealed that most people find cracker gags outdated.

Let's see how they got on...

10. Why is The Great British Bake-Off like the nativity?
Because the Star is in the Yeast.

9. I got a Ukip advent calendar. It's rubbish, all the doors keep slamming shut.

8. Why are snowmen rubbish at cricket?
They're always bowling snow-balls.

7. Why won't Santa visit Nigel Farage?
Because he only comes if you sleep, not if Ukip

6. What's the difference between Bono and Santa?
Santa gives you things you want.

5. Why is Christmas a busy time for David Cameron?
He's got two parties to organise.

4. What did the snowman say to the aggressive carrot?
"Get out of my face."

3. What do the UK royal family play at Christmas instead of musical chairs?
Game Of Thrones.

2. How does Luis Suarez like his Christmas dinner?
Bite-sized.

1. What will be missing from Take That's Christmas stocking this year?
An Orange.

■ WHY, WHY, WHY...

We Brits are renowned for moaning about our weather, and now we have new things called 'weather bombs' to moan about as well - extreme weather conditions - blamed of course on global warming.

So on the first anniversary this month of some pretty bad flooding in Hull, it was good to hear an elderly man recall his experiences of that time.

Forced to leave his flooded home, he proudly told how he had spent two nights at the Mercure Hotel, followed by three weeks at a Holiday Inn, having a wonderful time over the festive season. His best memory was of having three free Christmas dinners.

That is truly what I would call a 'glass half full' person, but his situation here was sadly far removed from those tiny tents provided for shelter during Thailands periods of much worse flooding.

On a lighter and slightly bizarre note, a new fashion from America is attracting a global following. This is more for the ladies, and concerns liberating your armpit hair by letting it do it's own thing, i.e. grow, then having it dyed. The dying is of course down to personal choice, as is a little pruning (presumably to control split ends) but followers claim to be empowered by the whole thing.

I doubt that the fashion will catch on it Thailand, where women habitually while away the hours by applying tweezers to their underarms. A method which, between you and me, I can personally recommend. It costs nothing and eventually the little hairy blighters give up altogether.

On a more politically correct note - there are calls for a ban on that popular song 'Delilah' at Cardiffs' Millenium Stadium, where it has become the unofficial anthem of Welsh rugby supporters. Support for the ban has also spread to Stoke City football club, and the way things are going it could soon become a bigger issue than the league tables.

Critics of the 1968 Tom Jones song say it is demeaning to women, because the lyrics appear to imply that it is OK to kill a woman for being unfaithful. Clearly the critics are unaware of a popular snack for ducks in Thailand.

It is not yet known whether any groups of scary women with very hairy, colourful armpits have invaded the Millenium Stadium pitch in support of the proposed ban. Probably only a matter of time.

And finally this weeks word. A brand new entry to the Oxford English Dictionary, which does seem to be a little demeaning to the growing minority of men who have been inspired this year by cyclists Bradley Wiggins and Chris Hoye. 'Mamil' refers to a middle aged man in Lycra.

Enjoy your Christmas and spare a thought for those in colder climes!

FEATURED GAME

FRIDAY 26TH DECEMBER 2014
PREMIER LEAGUE
Chelsea v West Ham 19:45
The Boxing Day programme has thrown up this cracker of a London derby, which at press time is 1st versus 4th, something that even the most optimistic Hammers fan wouldn't have expected when the fixtures were published in the summer. Manchester fans will be hoping that the away side will continue with their impressive form, and it wouldn't be the first time if they manage to upset the Blues. However, realistically a draw is the most likely outcome in what could be a highly entertaining game, which will probably have a bit of added needle this season, so red cards are a distinct possibility.

On the eighth day of Christmas...
Eight top teams out - of the FA Cup in the Third round

On the ninth day of Christmas...
Nine red cards given - in the Premier League to Lee Cattermole as he breaks Don Hutchison's record
