FREE AT LAST? CRUSADING JOURNALIST QUITS THAILAND

■ HUA HIN, THAILAND

The decision announced this week by the investigative journalist Andrew Drummond to leave Thailand after 25 years of mainly reporting on and exposing the activities of foreign criminals in Thailand has been greeted by most with an understanding of his reasons but also despairing that he has needed to do so.

In a statement issued on his website, andrew-drummond.com, he said: "I have enjoyed my time in Thailand where I have made many good Thai and foreign friends but there comes a time having too much knowledge which I cannot keep to myself can be too dangerous. My well being has been threatened as have those of my children. This is not of course the first time, but the recent threat came from a group of people who have killed with impunity before, and have even had police set up people on false charges." The statement goes on to detail his concerns with how the Thai legal system has been used by criminals to attempt to silence him and others, highlighting the fact that even in the most spurious of cases that these criminals do not get ordered to pay costs when defeated, and added, "Thailand's inability to take criticism, and its greatly flawed justice system, are major handicaps to its progress."

Drummond intends to continue his pursuit of the truth from outside Thailand, and his final sentence should perhaps ring warning bells for some: "I have worked as a journalist for over twenty years in Britain, the United States and Australia without being sued once. In many ways foreign criminals will be seen to have won this battle. They have not won the war."

Hua Hin has featured many times in stories investigated by Mr Drummond, mostly concerning foreign real estate developers, although his focus mainly fell on Pattaya; ultimately though he must put his family's safety first, and AWOL wishes him well.

CAPRICORN Dec 22 - Jan 19

The events of your life will continue to uncannily mirror those depicted in the film Ferris Bueller's Day Off. Next week: Hôtel Terminus.

AQUARIUS Jan 20 – Feb 18

Please try to keep in mind that high summer temperatures do not indicate the end of the world. The magma flowing up from the cracks in the earth, however, bear thinking about.

PISCES Feb 19 – Mar 20

You'll continue to brag about how well your career is going, although most people wouldn't call repeat visits to every all-you-can-eat offer available a "career."

ARIES Mar 21 - Apr 20

One of the worst moments of a person's life is when they finally realize that they're mortal and are going to die, especially when it's a person like you who only sees the cement truck at the last second.

TAURUS Apr 21 – May 21

You've been looking for true love for so long now that you've forgotten to do anything else, which should give you a clue as to why you didn't enjoy Comic-Con.

GEMINI May 22 – June 21

You just don't see what place slingshots have in today's modern world, which is yet another reason why you are such a terrible parent.

CANCER Jun 22 – Jul 22

Your irrational fear of sharks will disappear forever this week and be replaced with an extremely educated and informed fear of sharks.

LEO Jul 23 – Aug 22

The universe would like to thank you for your participation, hopes you know that you were really great, and wishes you luck in all your future endeavours.

VIRGO Aug 23 – Sep 22

You'll probably be surprised how quickly you become used to your new life, but then again, since you'll leave most of your frontal lobe back in your old life, maybe you won't be.

LIBRA Sep 23 – Oct 23

Your theory that "After this, they won't dare to elect another one of those bastards" sounds hopeful, but it flies in the face of everything we've learned in the past 20 years.

SCORPIO Oct 24 – Nov 21

You're generous to a fault, that fault being that you've acquired a reputation as the guy who always comes up with the ransom money.

SAGITTARIUS Nov 22 – Dec 21

You'll uncover startling proof that there is in fact nothing more to life than sitting around watching True Blood all day.

■ A section for all you budding etymologists where each week the origin of a word or phrase is investigated.

This week it is..... Moot point

An irrelevant argument.

Some may disagree with the above meaning and argue that it means 'a point open to debate', rather than 'a point not worth debating'. That former meaning was certainly the correct one when the term was first coined, but that's going back a while.

Laurence Humphrey, the president of Magdalen College, Oxford, wrote Nobles or of Nobilitye, a manual of behaviour for the English nobility, in 1563. In that he wrote:

"That they be not forced to sue the lawe, wrapped with so infinite crickes and moot poyntes."

In medieval England, moots, or meets, were assemblies or councils where points of government were debated. The country was split into juridicial areas called hundreds and administered via assemblies known as hundredmotes. The form of government has long since vanished but the term hundred is still in use as the name of the procedural device which gives consent to MPs' resignation. British MPs aren't allowed to resign and, when members wish to leave Parliament they may do so by applying for the notional position of Crown Steward and Bailiff of the Chiltern Hundreds. In such assemblies points which were put up for discussion were said to be mooted.

The change in meaning has come about following the introduction of 'moot courts', which are session where law students train for their profession by arguing hypothetical cases, that is, 'moot points'. The lack of any substantive outcome from these theoretical cases has led to the 'unimportant/not worth discussing' meaning of 'moot point', which is what many people accept today.

A further step, and one which it is to be hoped doesn't gain public acceptance, is the spelling as 'mute point'. This is a simple mistake, deriving no doubt from the fact that 'moot' is an archaic word with little other usage apart from in 'moot point' and that 'mute' makes some sort of sense when allied to the 'not worth discussing' meaning. This mistake isn't restricted to recent years. The earliest example of it that can be found is from John Hutchinson's Philosophical and Theological Works, 1749.

■ CASTAWAY

A young single guy is on a cruise ship, having the time of his life. On the second day of the cruise, the ship slams into an iceberg and begins to sink. Passengers around him are screaming, flailing, and drowning but our guy manages to grab on to a piece of driftwood and, using every last ounce of strength, swims a few miles through the shark-infested sea to a remote island.

Sprawled on the shore nearly passed out from exhaustion, he turns his head and sees a woman lying near him, unconscious, barely breathing. She's also managed to wash up on shore from the sinking ship. He makes his way to her, and with some mouth-to-mouth assistance he manages to get her breathing again. She looks up at him, wide-eyed and grateful and says, "My God, you saved my life!"

He suddenly realizes the woman is Angelina Jolie!

Weeks go by. and the pair are living on the island together. They've set up a hut, there's fruit on the trees, and they're in heaven. Angelina's fallen madly in love with our man, and they're making passionate love morning, noon and night. Alas, one day she notices he's looking kind of glum. "What's the matter, sweetheart?" she asks, "We have a wonderful life together, I'm in love with you. Is there something wrong? Is there anything I can do?"

He says, "Actually, Angelina, there is. Would you mind, putting on my clothes?"

"Sure," she says, "if it will help." He takes off his shirt and pants and she puts them on. "Okay, would you put on my hat now, and draw a little moustache on your face?" he asks. "Whatever you want, sweetie," she says, and does. Then he says, "Now, would you start walking around the edge of the island?"

She starts walking and then he sets off in the other direction. They meet up halfway around the island a little later. He rushes up to her, grabs her by the shoulders, and says, "Dude! You'll never believe who I'm sleeping with!"

PREGNANT PAUSE

Womens' things this week, but please don't let that put you guys off - it might still be interesting!

It was reported earlier this month that scientists have developed a postage stamp sized electronic chip which, when implanted under the skin, releases a daily dose of contraceptive.

Contraceptive implants are of course nothing new, and have enjoyed a great deal of popularity in Thailand. But in their early days they caused a lot of problems with periods. Even now they are clearly visible as a bump under the skin, often on the upper arm, and they need to be replaced at least every 5 years, and removed if the woman decides it is time for a baby. The new electronic widget, it is claimed, will last for up to 16 years, and can be remotely switched on and off as needed.

Looking back it really doesn't seem so long since the advent of the oral contraceptive pill, which itself only became widely available in 1961, five years before development of the implant began. But for women living in remote rural areas then the pill wouldn't have been the most convenient of birth control methods, and in the mid 20th century Thailand had one of the most rapid rates of population growth in the world.

Fortunately an American named Edwin McDaniel was around to develop one of the first - and biggest - family planning outreach programmes in the world. Edwin was born in 1917, the son of medical missionaries in what was then Siam, and there he spent much of his childhood, in Nakorn Sri Tamarat, where his parents ran a centre for sufferers of leprosy.

In 1948, following medical training back in the States, and his Army Medical Corp service, Edwin returned to Thailand to follow in his parents footsteps. He became director of Obstetrics and Gynaecology at the McCormick Hospital in Chiang Mai where, in the early 1960s, he set up the outreach family planning service destined to become world famous. His programme also drew international acclaim for promoting the wide spread use of the injectable contraceptive - forerunner of the implant - and much better suited to rural communities than the pill.

Dr Edwin McDaniel died in March 1999, and is buried in the Chiang Mai Foreign Cemetery. During his lifes work he saw Thailands' population growth rate reduce to one of the lowest in the world. His son Phillip became the third generation of McDaniel medical missionaries to the Land of Smiles.

In honour of Burns Night, this weeks word is one used by the Bard himself - 'shangan' - a cleft stick used to cause mischief or scare away a dog by pulling it's tail. Was he plagued by soi dogs I wonder?

FEATURED GAME

SATURDAY 24TH JANUARY 2015
THE FA CUP - FOURTH ROUND
Birmingham v West Brom 22:00
This game probably won't register on the radar of many people outside the Midlands, but this is a big derby game, with the Blues desperate to get one up on their Premier League rivals; they are some way off the pace in the race for promotion to the top flight, so unless the Baggies go down this season it will be a long wait for them to play again. We'd love to see an upset but the best the home side can realistically get is a draw we think, with West Brom going through in a replay.

DAVID GINOLA TO ADDRESS FOOTBALL CORRUPTION BY GETTING BOOKIE TO PAY HIM £250K TO RUN FOR FIFA JOB

■ FRANCE

Former footballer David Ginola is to run for the Fifa presidency to address financial influence in the world's most popular game, and will begin by being paid £250k by a bookmaker just to run for the job.

The former French international will run on a mandate of 'cleaning up the game', but will first accept a massive cheque from a company that encourages people to gamble away their hard-earned cash.

Ginola told reporters, "There is only one way to show how money has corrupted the beautiful game, and that is for me to get paid a lot of money just to apply for the job."

"I don't want people to think I am being paid to do anything at Fifa, I am not, this is just to run for the job – remember that."

"When I'm in power it will take a lot more than £250k to get me to do your bidding."

Bookmakers Paddy Power explained that they are sick of senior football people being paid to do things on behalf corporate interests, and that they are keen to address this by paying a senior football person to represent their corporate interests.

A spokesperson for the bookie said, "Something must be done to counter the influence of money in the game, and we think that that something is to throw more money at influential people in the game."

"It's a great plan, isn't it?"
