HIGH SPEED TRAINS - ARE THEY NEEDED?

■ HUA HIN, THAILAND

In March and June last year, we reported that the funding for the proposed high speed train network had been ruled unconstitutional and that the project, including a Bangkok - Hua Hin line, was unlikely to go ahead. However last week, Prime Minister Prayut Chan-o-cha tasked agencies to do a feasibility study on building a high-speed rail network linking Bangkok and popular tourism destinations with joint investment from the private sector, with Hua Hin and Pattaya being specifically mentioned.

Given the number of times the high speed train link from Bangkok to Hua Hin has been proposed, studied and ultimately shelved over the years, we have little confidence that this will ever happen, and despite the initial appeal of the idea and the notion that one could be in the heart of Bangkok in an hour, there are several things that might dampen enthusiasm for it.

Chief among these is safety, as the current delapidated rail network has had a very chequered past, with a number of high profile crashes and derailments, as well as the notoriously dangerous level crossings, and given the proposed speeds of any new system, this is something that has the potential for disaster. Ticket pricing has never been mentioned to date, but given the huge amount of money that would need to be spent to construct the connection, we suspect that it would not be competitive with the alternatives on the road, although undoubtedly faster and more environmentally friendly.

We feel that the revamping and dual tracking of the existing network that is currently underway may well be enough to cope with demand, with more and safer trains able to run, and should cut the current journey times by rail significantly so it offers a genuine alternative, which in turn may encourage more people to travel to Hua Hin by rail than road. As we noted last week, the roads are dangerous in Thailand, so anything that helps reduce traffic will also save lives. A high speed train to and from Hua Hin, we suspect, might turn out to be a white elephant.

While you might have been able to forgive her for walking out on you, your hatred of ska music is such that you'll never forgive her for skanking out on you.

AQUARIUS Jan 20 – Feb 18

You've given up tilting at windmills once and for all, pragmatically deciding to dispatch them with much more sensible grenades instead of that horseback-lance setup.

PISCES Feb 19 – Mar 20

Uncontrollable spasms will cause you to accidentally scrawl across many of your important meeting notes this week, proving conclusively that orgasms are simply not worth the trouble.

ARIES Mar 21 - Apr 20

Your dealings with the dark powers will be jeopardized when even they are a little freaked out by how eager you are to behead all those chickens.

TAURUS Apr 21 – May 21

You will be transfixed by the realisation that human lives are as unique as a snowflakes, and just as indistinguishable from one another when viewed from the proper distance.

GEMINI May 22 – June 21

You'll soon grow dependent on drugs just to make it through the day, but unfortunately it's because of cancer and not anything fun or interesting like addiction.

CANCER Jun 22 – Jul 22

Your death next week will come as a complete surprise, but appropriately enough, not for the reasons you might expect.

LEO Jul 23 – Aug 22

You always thought that when the giant robots began to arrive they'd be your friends, but hey, live and learn.

VIRGO Aug 23 – Sep 22

You've always been afraid to try new things, which is fortunate, as a whole bunch of new things will go around killing people who try them this week.

LIBRA Sep 23 – Oct 23

Your pessimism and negativity are usually misplaced, but they'll be perfectly appropriate when your elevator plunges into the flames Thursday.

SCORPIO Oct 24 – Nov 21

Sure enough, Al Green will take all your blues away just like he always does, but the day is fast approaching when you'll find out where he's been taking them.

SAGITTARIUS Nov 22 – Dec 21

Millions of dollars will slip through your fingers when you discover that people are willing to pay good money for fake dog faeces and decide the real thing must be worth twice as much.

A section for all you budding etymologists where each week the origin of a word or phrase is investigated.

This week it is..... In someone's bad books

To be in disgrace or out of favour.

In the Middle Ages 'one's books' was understood to mean 'one's reckoning or cognizance', ie: the esteem in which one was held by others. To be 'out of someone's books' meant you were no longer part of their life and of no interest to them. This meaning is first recorded in The Parlyament of Deuylles, 1509 - "He is out of our bokes, and we out of his". The use of books to indicate favour or disfavour is enshrined in several phrases - 'good books', 'bad books', 'black books'.

The first of these was 'black books', which appears to have originated by allusion to an actual book. In 1592, Robert Greene published his intention to create a Blacke Booke, which was to list the misdemeanors of various classes of criminal. As a preamble he wrote his Black Book's Messenger, which included:

"Ned Brownes villanies which are too many to be described in my Blacke Booke."

This phrase had become used figuratively by 1785 (that is, as a form of disfavour, but where no actual book was in evidence) when it was recorded in Grose's Dictionary of the Vulgar Tongue:

"He is down in the black book, that is, has a stain in his character."

'Bad books' arrived on the scene later and is first recorded in Perry's History of the Church of England, 1861:

"The Arminians, who at that time were in his bad books."

Is there an English phrase or saying that you would like to know more about?

■ IF FIFTY SHADES OF GREY WAS WRITTEN BY A MAN

1. At the touch of her lips, it grew long and swollen. I sighed as she squeezed and pulled expertly. It was the best balloon giraffe I'd ever seen.
2. My tongue flicked in and out, in and out, faster and faster until she was completely helpless. No woman can resist a good lizard impression.
3. 'How do you feel about using toys in the bedroom?' she asked. 'Fine,' I said, 'But I can't see how we're going to fit a Scalextric in here.'
4. Her body tensed and quivered as she felt wave after wave flow through it. I probably should've told her about the new electric fence.
5. As I lay there on the floor, my naked body covered in treacle and whipped cream, I heard those inevitable words . . . 'Clean up on aisle 3.'
6. 'Are you ready to be tortured in a way only a woman can torture a man?' she asked. I nodded nervously. 'OK' she said and ate half my chips.
7. 'I'm a bad girl,' she whispered, 'Punish me in a way only a real man can!' 'Alright,' I said and left my wet towels on the bathroom floor.
8. 'Hurt me!' she begged, leaning over the dining table expectantly. 'OK,' I replied, 'Your turkey's too dry and your sprouts are overcooked.'
9. She leant over the kitchen table. 'Smack that bottom,' she squealed, 'Smack it hard!' 'I am,' I said, 'But the ketchup just won't come out.'
10. They asked me to smear their naked bodies with the produce from my herb garden but I just couldn't do it. Too many women, not enough thyme.
11. 'I'm your slave,' she said breathlessly, 'Make me feel completely helpless and worthless.' So I locked her in the shed and went to the pub.
12. Her body trembled and shook.'I can't wait any longer, do it now!' she cried. 'OK,' I said and got the winter duvet from the airing cupboard.
13. 'Harder!' she cried, gripping the workbench even tighter, 'Harder!' 'Alright,' I said, 'What's the gross national product of Nicaragua?'

MAGS MEANDERINGS: FROM SOM TAM TO MUSHY PEAS

■ TITTER YE NOT!

'No sex please - we're Thai' was the draconian message handed down to young people by the powers that be ahead of Valentines Day. The message even went so far as to imply that abstaining on February 14th showed respect for Thailand.

There is nothing wrong of course with encouraging safe sex, providing appropriate education on the subject, and support for those who need it. But shouldn't that all be done as part of an ongoing programme aimed at promoting health, well being, and family values?

Instead it sounded more like a one off directive from on high, laced with a bit of blackmail.

Speaking of which, the UK government has announced proposals to blackmail those on Welfare who are obese or drug addicts, by cutting their benefits if they refuse help.

We've heard it all before, know that the aim is to win votes, and realise that there are too few resources to make it happen. In fact it is as 'pie in the sky' as expecting Thai youngsters to abstain from sex.

Which wasn't much of a problem for one Hull man in 2002. Stephen Hall, a 23 year old chef, was spotted by train passengers having sex with a female goat in a field close by the railway line. Unfortunately for Stephen - and maybe fortunately for the goat - the train had slowed to a halt just before a crossing, giving passengers a ring side seat. Several horrified travellers phoned the police, and Stephen ended up with a 6 month prison sentence without a goat in sight. Meanwhile the victim was reported to have been 'mesmerised' by her ordeal.

The whole thing raises two important questions. First - why do the press always find it necessary to state the profession of the accused? And more importantly - if you had been on that train what would your first reaction have been? (Remember that sadly this was before iPhones, YouTube and the like.) So would you too have been horrified or, come on - admit it, struggling to suppress a titter?

Seriously though, when it comes to the mistreatment of animals most of us do feel outraged. So it seems a bit strange that pictures of naked supermodels getting up close and personal with large fish are being used to promote the work of the Blue Marine Foundation, which campaigns to protect endangered species. The latest pic shows a giant tuna, wearing a rather glazed expression, while wrapped in the arms and legs of Helena Bonham Carter. Wouldn't you think the Blue Marine Foundation would at least have had the photos taken in water?

Word of the week is 'lour.' This describes how you might look when you can't get a beer in the 7Eleven at a minute past eleven - sullen, angry or scowling. Also used to describe a dark threatening looking sky.

WEIRD NEWS

■ UK Sad man gets first-ever date after sandwich board stunt – then stands her up

A man whose romantic plight has already caused howls of laughter across the UK has messed up his first-ever date.

Paul Barry, 21, turned up too late and stood up his date after he 'wooed' her using a humiliating sandwich board sign saying, 'Will date anyone.'

Perhaps it wasn't that much of a surprise, as Paul Barry is a man who freely admits to being unable to download and operate Tinder.

Paul Barry, 21, originally from Dublin, went outdoors of his own free will wearing a sign saying, 'Will date anyone', but was STILL unable to find love.

He later went on a local radio show after his stunt made headlines – and secured a date with Jodi Thompson, 23 The pair agreed to watch the new Fifty Shades of Grey film.

But unemployed Paul was 25 minutes late after he missed his train from Southport to Liverpool and instead spent Valentine's night in the pub with his pals while Jodi watched the racy flick with a friend.

Paul said: 'I just saw the train doors close then I realised that I was on the wrong platform. It was a disaster.

'It was all my fault and I'm pretty gutted.

Jodi said: 'Unfortunately, at the moment I couldn't commit to another date.

■ CANADA Muslim manager tells staff to 'blow away' the competition… it doesn't end well

A telecoms sales manager sent his staff a text message urging them to 'blow away' the competition at a trade show – and the Muslim man ended up in jail.

Quebec sales chief Saad Allami, 41, said the message was intended to pump up his staff – but it led to a team of police officers storming his home and telling Allami's wife he was a terrorist.

Allami is now suing the Quebec police force for $65,000.

He says he was arrested three hours after sending the message, while a squad of police officers conducted an 'intrusive' search of his home.

'The whole time, the officers kept repeating to the plaintiff's wife that her husband was a terrorist,' the lawsuit says.

Allami says he has no links to terrorist organisations, and that the police acted without evidence.

He was not charged.

■ USA We should beam Sir Cliff Richard into space, say alien-hunting scientists

Scientists have concluded that we should beam Sir Cliff Richard into space.

Don't worry, Sir Cliff fans – the Search for Extaterrestrial Intelligence (SETI) are proposing we beam his music at nearby star systems, not that we teleport Sir Cliff himself into the Great Beyond.

SETI suggests that transmitting radio signals containing Sir Cliff's music might be the best way to signal other civilisations that we are here.

Seth Shostak, the head of the alien-hunting organisation, suggested that ET might be bored if we transmitted 'proofs' of our scientific prowess – and might enjoy unwinding to Sir Cliff instead.

Shostak said, 'Maybe they are interested in rock 'n roll. Maybe they want cliff richard.'

Shostake also suggested that aliens might enjoy cricket. He said, 'If they are clever, they might figure out something about cricket.'

A discussion on the next step, transmitting a 'Hello' message to the stars, takes place this week at the annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science in San Jose, California.

Dr Vakoch, from the Seti Institute in Mountain View, California, said: 'We started the Earth Speaks project in 2009 because we wanted to expand the discussion beyond a handful of scientists that have been grappling with these issues.

'When the Voyager spacecraft was sent out by Nasa in the 1970s it was half a dozen specialists.

'If we really want, really want to represent humankind we need a broader representation.

FEATURED GAME

SUNDAY 22ND FEBRUARY 2015
PREMIER LEAGUE
Tottenham v West Ham 19:00
Always a hotly contested derby, this has added significance this season with both sides competing for European places. The Hammers have had a rough few weeks with injuries, while Spurs seem to be finding form again, helped massively by the goals of Harry Kane. We can't see anything except a home win here, and it could get quite embarrassing for the away team if they are not careful.

CHED EVANS ACCEPTS HE'S UNIVERSALLY HATED AND APPLIES TO BE A REFEREE

■ UK

After failing to be recruited as a footballer at several Clubs following his release from prison for rape, former Sheffield United striker Ched Evans has announced that he's to become a referee. It is understood that the widespread abuse he relentlessly receives as a result of his poor decisions has already gone some way towards preparing him for the new role.

His agent explained; 'Ched will make an excellent referee as he's already developed many of the characteristics required. A catalogue of gross misjudgements, no outward signs of remorse and a confidence that he can get away with causing people to suffer have trained him to ignore all the loud protestations from the pitch and stands. When he's out there controlling the game I don't think he'll have a problem with doing whatever he feels is right, whether he's right or not.'

A spokesman from the Professional Referees Association gave the news a cautious welcome, but explained that former players with an understanding of how the game is played are generally discouraged from refereeing. 'We usually look for social outcasts with a deep-seated, almost pathological hatred of football and its supporters, who then draw strength and a will to carry on by feeding on reciprocal feelings being chanted from the stands,' he said. 'But it seems that Ched is developing that side of his game nicely, with fans, players, managers, chairmen and the media already queuing up to publicly slate him.'

'There may be some ironic chants of 'who's the bd in the black?" Ched's agent added. 'But if a dodgy free kick goes their way, I'm sure they'll soon come round.'

Meanwhile, the Football League and the Football Association, the authorities which control the national game, remained silent regarding the announcement. It was as if they were too drunk to speak.

Above: Having been unable to control his own tackle it looks as though Evans will now be trying to control others'.
