BRITISH EXPATS FEEL BREXIT EFFECT

■ HUA HIN, THAILAND

We weren't going to make any more serious reference to the tumultuous Brexit vote that took place in the UK last week, but a combination of reader communication and a lack of local news has left us with little choice this week. You will also find a little EU Referendum humour on our Jokes page this week, on page 10.

However we are going to try and give a slightly different spin on events to how the world media has been covering it, and try to make a comparison to the position Thailand has found itself in previously. Some of the noises coming out of the defeated Remain camp, from both politicians and the public, almost echo some of what was said in Thailand by those supporting the so-called 'Yellow Shirts', who maintained that many of the opposing side were not intellectually equipped to be able to cast their vote properly, when faced by yet another 'Red Shirt' win. The Remain camp haven't gone quite that far, but some have inferred that people voting Leave are either racists or doddery old people, and were conned by the campaign, going as far as to call for a second referendum.

Obviously in Thailand the animosity between the two sides spilled over into ugly scenes of airport takeovers, main intersection closures and violence, as well as accusations of vote buying and polling irregularities, and eventually heralded the army takeover and current political situation. It doesn't seem likely that we will see such scenes in the UK, but either way, democracy becomes the loser when such votes are challenged, even with harsh and insulting words. Hopefully as time goes on, it can heal the rifts, and each side can acknowledge that it is neither a doomsday nor a paradise scenario, and that both were right and wrong. For anyone who is being directly and negatively affected by the current financial markets instability, we hope and trust that it is both short term and reversible over time.

■ A section for all you budding etymologists where each week the origin of a word or phrase is investigated.

This week it is..... Guinea-pig

A person or animal who is used as the subject of an experiment.

It isn't at all clear why these cute family pets came to be given their name. They are cavies, not pigs, and they don't originate from Guinea. Both 'guinea' and 'pig' seem to stem from simple, but mistaken, associations. The name 'guinea pig' dates from the 17th century and the first record of it (as 'ginny-pig') is in William Harvey's medical textbook Anatomical exercitations, concerning the generation of living creatures, 1653.

The 'guinea' part of the name is perplexing. It was certainly a reference to a place rather than to the idea that the animals cost a guinea to buy. The guinea coin was first struck in 1663 - after Harvey's publication. Guinea is in fact in East Africa but the little rodents, properly called Cavia Cobaya, are from the Andean region of South America. It could be that the name derives from the 'Guineamen', which were sailing ships that followed a route from the UK to Africa and then on to the Americas, plying the slave trade. It could also be that the distinction between West Africa and South America wasn't as clear as it is now. 'Guinea' may have just been a synonym for 'somewhere a long way across the sea'.

'Pig' is a little easier to understand. Cavies do at least look somewhat like tiny pigs and that was in the mind of the academics who first gave them a Latin name - Cavia porcellus, porcellus meaning 'little pig'. This is in line with the habit at the time of naming any small and vaguely porcine creatures as 'pigs'. George Gascoigne's translation of Noble Arte Venerie, 1575 does that for baby badgers: "There are Foxes and theyr Cubbes, and Badgerdes and theyr Pigges."

The same loose associations were no doubt at work when the animal was called the Spanish Coney in a 1710 edition of The British Apollo: Containing Two Thousand Answers to Curious Questions in Arts and Sciences: "A Guinea Pig... in Johnston's Natural History goes by the Name of a Spanish Coney." Coney was the old name for rabbit so, instead of a pig from Guinea we have a rabbit from Spain.

The first use of the term 'guinea pig' to describe a person didn't have the current 'subject of an experiment' meaning, but was a name for inexperienced midshipmen on the sailing ships mentioned above, as recorded in The Adventures of a Kidnapped Orphan, 1747: "He sent his nephew, at the age of fourteen, on a voyage as a Guinea-pig."

It wasn't until the 20th century that the expression was given its current meaning. This was first alluded to by George Bernard Shaw, in Quintessence of Ibsenism Now Completed, 1913: "The... folly which sees in the child nothing more than the vivisector sees in a guinea pig: something to experiment on with a view to rearranging the world." Shaw, who was a noted vegetarian and what would now be called an animal liberationist, was referring to the practice of using guinea pigs in scientific experiments. This had been going for some time by 1913. The celebrated French chemist Antoine Lavoisier used a guinea pig in an experiment on respiration in 1780.

Why guinea pigs were chosen as subjects of experimentation isn't entirely clear. They may not have cost the huge price of a guinea but, being imported from 'Guinea', they were more expensive than mice and rats, which have now largely, if doubtless reluctantly, taken their place.

■ THE EU REFERENDUM
Following the Brexit vote there is a lot of uncertainty ahead for high street banks as all the UK's armed robbers come back from Spain

New Boris bikes will be installed in London tomorrow enabling customers to be able to backpedal

England fans were rejoicing at the headline "Sterling dropped" until the Iceland match started

I thought that was a bit off.

How many Brits does it take to change a broken lightbulb?
None. They just move out of the house.

An Englishman, a Scotsman and an Irishman went to a bar.
They all had to leave because the Englishman wanted to go.

In a last ditch attempt to persuade the UK voters to vote Remain, it has been revealed that the European Union commissioners announced that agreement had been reached to adopt English as the preferred language for European communications, rather than German, which was the other possibility. A five-year phased plan, below, was put forward for what was to be known as EuroEnglish (Euro for short).
"In the first year, "s" will be used instead of the soft "c." Sertainly, sivil servants will resieve this news with joy. Also, the hard "c" will be replaced with "k". Not only will this klear up konfusion, but typewriters kan have one less letter.
There will be growing publik emthusiasm in the sekond year, when the troublesome "ph" will be replaced by "f". This will make words like fotograf" 20 persent shorter.
In the third year, publik akseptanse of the new spelling kan be expekted to reach the stage where more komplikated changes are possible. Governments will enkorage the removal of double letters, which have always ben a deterent to akurate speling. Also, al wil agre that the horible mes of silent "e"s in the languag is disgrasful, and they would go.

By the fourth year, peopl wil be reseptiv to steps such as replasing "th" by "z" and "w" by " v".
During ze fifz year, ze unesesary "o" kan be dropd from vords kontaining "ou", and similar changes vud of kors be aplid to ozer kombinations of leters.
After zis fifz yer, ve vil hav a reli sensibl riten styl. Zer vil be no mor trubls or difikultis and evrivun vil find it ezi tu understand ech ozer.
Ze drem vil finali kum tru."

CHOKING UP

On July 1st 1967 the European Community was formally created by the merger of the Common Market, the European Coal and Steel Community, and the European Atomic Energy Commission.

In 2016 Britain has to import most of its' coal. Not - as you might imagine - from the EU, but from Russia, Colombia, and the US.

With the closure last year of the UKs' last deep mine, and fierce resistance to applications for open cast mines on environmental grounds, our production continues to decline. And over the last 10 years, during which Russia has been a major supplier to the UK, our usage and imports have also declined, but not by enough to put right the effects in those countries which supply us.

Not only is imported coal having to travel thousands of miles, it is also claimed by campaigners to have caused major devastation in one particular area of Siberia, where whole villages are said to have disappeared. Not just because the land they occupied has been destroyed by mining, but because many villagers have had to move due to the pollution which has accompanied the mining. This in turn has dramatically changed the lives of some small ethnic groups forced to move into the cities.

In the main mining region of Siberia - Kuzbass - the coal industry is said to have contaminated over 90 percent of water supplies, while the UN has identified a high level of broncho pulmonary illnesses, with 80 per cent of related deaths caused by mining. In Kuzbass even the snow is black.

It seems that the health risks caused by mining have simply been passed from our own backyards to those of other people who are much poorer and don't have a NHS.

On July 1st 1999 legislative powers were officially transferred from the old Scottish Office in London to the new devolved Scottish Executive in Edinburgh, based at Holyrood, just a stones throw from the Palace. This followed the 1997 referendum in which Scotland voted for devolution.

Three days after the UK's EU Referendum Nicola Sturgeon, Scotlands' First Minister and leader of the Scottish National Party, announced that Holyrood had the power to block the Brexit vote. She did add that it wouldn't, which should of course be enough to reassure everyone.

I have never been a huge fan of Cliff Richard, but he had an excellent backing group and has always seemed quite harmless. So I hope that he sues the socks off the BBC, whose coverage of a raid on his home a couple of years ago surely only happened because of his fame and Knighthood. Cliff has suffered enough as a result of the fallout from Operation Yewtree, and compared to Clement Freud he looks like a saint.

If you would like to come along then visit the new single website at http://www.h2h3-cah3.com or Facebook at www.facebook.com/H2H3CAH3 for full details and directions. Follow this road to the car park.

If you are coming from Cha Am, the easiest way to get to the run site is to take the klong road. Once 2 km past Palm Hills traffic circle, stay alert for the HHH sign at soi 2. You cannot miss the intersection as it is the first place you will find traffic signals going south on klong road.

On After: Anki's Steak House

Hares: Screwdriver

Put the envelope in the blue tax collection box near the Haberdasher's pickup. Tax payments are 50 baht Hashers 8 thru 18 years of age pay 25 baht. Virgins/visitors run free. Some free beer for virgins / visitors is a promise. If you prefer to stand in a queue, you will find envelopes, pens, paper, tape and staples next to the tax box. Please use minimum coins. Hard to get the coins into the bank.

Beer: If you wish to drink beer, and drink cheap, bring your own beer of choice and in your own cooler. Otherwise you can buy cans of Leo for the exorbitant price of 50 baht. 3.9 MILLION SIGN PETITION TO REPLAY ENGLAND VS ICELAND

■ ENGLAND

A petition set up by disgruntled England fans to replay their side's 2-1 European Championship defeat to Iceland has reached 3.9 million signatures.

The petition, which now triggers a debate in Parliament, challenges the methods in which results of football matches are determined, particularly those which end in an unfavourable reverse.

England fan and petition owner Simon Williams felt that the failure of the England players to deliver when it mattered most necessitated a retrospective re-write of the rulebook, with a rematch being for the good of European competition.

"The result is unacceptable, unstomachable – no one wants a tiny isolationist island getting through to the next round – it must not stand," he told us.

Left: Angry England fans threaten to invade Iceland because of the unfair result, as well as the dodgy tummy they had after eating the frozen Deep Pan Doner Kebab Pizza

"No-one told the players they needed to do their bit on the pitch and score more than the opposition – in a situation as important at this the other team should have to score at least two more than England in order to secure a victory.

"It's just so unfair that the result isn't the one I wanted – can we go back to the bit when we were still in Europe, please?"

UEFA have dismissed the request stating early investigations had revealed 35,000 of the signatories could be traced to a team bus exiting the Nice area of France in a directionless fashion.

A spokesperson added, "You cannot change the result, even if it was clearly determined by morons who didn't seem to know what they were doing.

"And no, we wouldn't have played Rooney in midfield either."
