HIGHWAY TO HELL

PARENTS BLAMED FOR YOUTH BIKE DEATHS

HUA HIN, THAILAND

We make no excuses this week for returning to a topic that has featured many times on our front page, normally triggered by a fatality in a road accident, but this time by a report released this week by Ramathibodi Hospital's Child Safety Promotion and Injury Prevention Research Centre (CSIP),

Dr Adisak Plitpolkarnpim, director of CSIP, said that over 15,800 Thai youngsters between the ages of 10 and 14 were injured, and about 700 killed each year from motorcycle accidents. This represents nearly two dead and over 43 injured every day, or 19 dead and 430 injured every 10 days. The death toll will increase to 31 in ten days during long vacations or festivals such as New Year and Songkran.

Dr Adisak noted that these figures tend to increase every year, making Thailand the world's Number One with the highest death toll from accidents involving motorcycles. He pointed the finger directly at parents as being the main ones responsible for the horrific statistics, but added that anyone who saw underage kids riding on motorcycles and did nothing about it are also to blame.

While we at AWOL make him correct in his observations, we would not advise any of our readers to get directly involved in such situations unless they are the parent or know the children in question, as this could be taken the wrong way by some Thai parents, but the location and licence plate of repeat offenders could certainly be passed on to the police in the hope that they will deal with it.

Much has been made in recent weeks of the response to the bombings, and the clampdown on serious crime in Hua Hin, but the fact remains that the roads are the most dangerous place for residents and tourists, as they have been for many years, and not just for young Thais.

■ A section for all you budding etymologists where each week the origin of a word or phrase is investigated.

This week it is..... A watched pot never boils

Time feels longer when you're waiting for something to happen.

'A watched pot never boils' is one of the homely and improving proverbs that is ascribed to Poor Richard, which was the pseudonym that Benjamin Franklin used when publishing his widely popular annual almanac. Franklin, a tireless and industrious polymath, was fixated on such improving aphorisms and published numerous of them in the guise of Poor Richard between 1732 and 1758. The general theme of the proverbs can be summed up as 'Industry: good; sloth: bad'. They include:

There are no gains without pains.
Early to bed and early to rise makes a man healthy, wealthy and wise.
Plough deep while sluggards sleep and you shall have corn to sell and to keep.
Have you something to do tomorrow? Do it today.

Amongst many other callings, Franklin was a noted diplomat and during his time as United States envoy to France he was directed by the King to write a report on Franz Mesmer's controversial theory of 'animal magnetism'. In the report, published in 1785, Franklin included this text:

Finally another Breakfast is ordered. One Servant runs for fresh Water, another for Coals. The Bellows are plied with a will. I was very Hungry; it was so late;

"a watched pot is slow to boil," as Poor Richard says.

Actually, Franklin ought to have written "as Poor Richard might have said", as the proverb isn't found in any of the Poor Richard almanacs. That's a moot point however, Franklin and Poor Richard being one and the same.

Of course, Franklin was also a celebrated scientist and would have been aware that watching a pot has no effect on how long it takes to boil. Like many of the most effective proverbs, this one is poetic rather than literal.

■ GYPSY TART
Pulled a gypsy bird last night, she asked me did I want to go back to hers for a good time, well I thought it would be rude to refuse, and she wasn't kidding.

I went on the Dodgems, Waltzer, Ghost Train and come home with a goldfish....

■ ANTIQUES ROADSHOW
Paddy took two tatty stuffed dogs to the Antiques Roadshow....
"Ooh!" Said the presenter, "this is a very rare breed, do you have any idea what they would fetch if they were in good condition?"
"Sticks." Paddy replied.

■ SECS
It's nonsense that men think about sex every seven vagina.

■ ALARM
Just read a sign saying "This door is alarmed". It didn't even look mildly shocked to me.

■ VAN
I bought a camper van.
My previous pink one wasn't quite camp enough.

■ GIRLFRIEND
My girlfriend wants a guy who is 'funny and spontaneous',yet when I tap on her window uninvited at night dressed as a clown,it's all screams and sirens

■ PEELER
I couldn't find the thingy that peels the potatoes and carrots so I asked the kids.
Apparently she left me two days ago.

■ DESCRIPTIVE
My wife asked me to describe myself in three words.
"Lazy"

LIFE ON MARS

HOW TO SURVIVE AS AN ALIEN IN THAILAND

ON THE ROAD AGAIN

A feature common to many developing countries, and particularly Asian ones, is that the driving skills and road sense of many road users appears somewhat lacking when compared to most Western nations. It is a common occurrence in expat watering holes to hear tales of near misses and idiotic behaviour on the roads, as well as the unfortunately all too common stories of death and severe injury, most notably to those riding on two wheels.

The numbers of bikes and scooters on the roads in Thailand is phenomenal, for understandable reasons, mainly financial, and it is a frequent sight to see four, five or even more riding on a single scooter. The prevalence of two wheeled transport on it's own is not a problem, but the way many ride them is; traffic laws are ignored, including the direction of travel, speed limits, indicators, wearing of crash helmets, and possessing licence, tax and insurance, with only a couple of these ever being enforced rigorously by the police.

Unfortunately many visitors to Thailand start to adopt the same careless disregard of the rules, and inevitably the consequence is that both Thai and foreign riders end up at some point in the hospital or on a slab at the morgue. This scenario is not helped by the state of some of the road surfaces, either due to a poor initial construction, shoddy maintenance or a combination of the two.

Part of the reason some Thais drive so recklessly is a belief that whatever happens is 'Buddha's will', a semi-religious fatalistic approach to life that many Thais have, that also explains the common practice of having cars and bikes 'blessed' (for want of a better word), by monks, something that also is done with houses, with the concept being that this offers protection against misfortune.

However, across Asia it does also seem like there is a general absence of spatial awareness, whether that is as a pedestrian or driver/rider that affects the ability to detect when one is too close to something or somebody, as well as a somewhat blinkered view only to the front when moving. You have been warned!

GREAT BRITISH TRADE OFF

Remember Teletext?

If you are aged 30 ish or under you will probably need to google it. For older folk it was a revolution in TV, allowing access on demand to a service which provided news, weather, travel and other updates, as well as programming, and it all began on September 23rd 1974 with the launch of Ceefax by the BBC.

During the last week the BBC has grabbed more than its' fair share of media attention with the thorny issue of staff salaries, and the even more contentious loss of the Great British Bakeoff to Channel 4.

I must admit the modern trend of trading in TV programmes is a bit of a mystery to me, as is the need for so many channels. It must be an age thing. But I can understand the appeal of Bakeoff, if only the wait for some towering confection to collapse at the last minute, or for some poor soul to be accused of having soggy bottoms. And if nothing else it does seem to have revived the nations' interest in baking. Yet once again the BBC loses one of its' most popular programmes to a competitor, while it's viewers continue to pay their TV licence fees.

At least the sale of the Great British Bakeoff (other countries versions of Bakeoff are available) should help to fund the massive salaries which caused the other great debate of the week. Because the BBC has been ordered to make public the salaries of some 100 or so of its' staff who earn over 150,000 pounds a year. And presumably by 'staff' that means mainly stars - the actors and presenters who help to turn some programmes into such valuable commodities.

By most standards 150 thousand a year sounds like big money. It is certainly more than our most senior politicians earn (after their expenses and perks of course) but still a lot less than many footballers and senior figures in industry, banking etc whose salaries are in the public domain. So what is so wrong about BBC salaries being made public? The days when the 'stars' had only one other option - to defect to ITV - are long gone, and if the BBC can't justify those higher salaries against much stronger competition will it find that its' glory days are over?

September 23rd is also a memorable date for Qantas, whose safety record ended in ruins at the 18th hole of a Bangkok golf course. Or a least that was the story which circulated among expats in 1999, when the Qantas Boeing slid off the runway at Don Mueang airport and ended up on the edge of a golf course. The actual hole it arrived at was never known, but it was a long way from Arrivals.

MAN UNITED STRUGGLING TO REPLACE HOWARD WEBB, INSISTS MOURINHO

■ ENGLAND

Following a third straight defeat, Man United manager Jose Mourinho has insisted the club have never recovered from Howard Webb's retirement.

Speaking after United's 3-1 defeat to Watford, the former Real Madrid and Chelsea boss claimed the current crop of Man United referees are failing to produce when it matters.

"We gave Mark Clattenburg an opportunity to send off their goalkeeper and award a penalty in the game against Manchester City," he explained.

"He failed to take his chance so Jesús Gil Manzano started the next game.

"Yet he completely ignored the collective value of my squad by allowing Feyenoord to win."

Left: Webb in his heyday, celebrating United's last league title

Despite the 3-1 defeat against Watford, Mourinho was less critical of referee Michael Oliver's performance.

"He made some individual mistakes, but we can work on those in training," he said

"We have been running extra intensive drills to make sure that all the Premier League referees understand that if a Manchester United player goes down anywhere near the penalty area it's a stonewall penalty, and if any opposition player has a hand within three feet of the ball in the area it is also a penalty."

Mourinho plans to work on the assistant referees flag waving abilities as well, having noticed a reluctance to allow his team the advantage in borderlne offside decisions that was once the norm in Webb's heyday, along with the vital extra added minutes at the end of any game where United were losing.
