SERVICE INCLUDED?

FOCUS ON EXTRA CHARGES IN RESTAURANTS

■ HUA HIN, THAILAND

While it has not been reported to AWOL since we have been publishing, it appears that there is a problem in Thailand with restaurant service charges being added without customers being aware of them.

The Department of Internal Trade says it will summon a meeting with the Thai Restaurant Association to discuss the issue of service charge collection in its move to mandate all restaurants to display service charge on their menus.

Somsak Kiattichailak, the director-general of the Department of Internal Trade stated this week that the meeting is aimed at ordering all restaurants to put up clear signs indicating the amount of service charges that will be billed to their clientele on top of charges for foods and drinks. Mr Kiattichailak added that this is to ensure fairness for customers, and in future diners will be able to refuse to pay service charges if any restaurant fails to comply with this requirement.

The issue of service charges is one that divides many people, dependent largely on the culture that they have grown up with; it also depends on whether the establishment imposing them is passing them on to their staff. Most patrons believe that any service charge or tip should go wholly to the staff, but many suspect that percentage charges added to bills end up in the owners' pockets, and it appears that it is common practice in Thailand that these charges are not publically displayed.

Tipping is not a common practice in many countries, and is often only done by customers who feel that have had service which has been exceptional; but in some other countries it is the norm, regardless of service received, so it is understandable that some places will add a set percentage service charge, and a policy to have this clearly displayed by all is a good move. An even better move would be that it was mandatory for this charge to be given to the staff.

CAPRICORN Dec 22 - Jan 19
This week a shattered tea set will serve as a fitting metaphor for your clumsy coming-of-age as a woman.

AQUARIUS Jan 20 – Feb 18
For the third straight night, your wife will pass away loudly, painfully, and repeatedly in your sleep.

PISCES Feb 19 – Mar 20
Everything you touch will soon turn to gold, giving the cops a glittering, sparkling trail of nine-year-olds to follow.

ARIES Mar 21 – Apr 20
Your radical new look will cause heads to turn, as complete strangers hurry to avoid eye contact with you.

TAURUS Apr 21 – May 21
As you'll soon learn, there are scandals and then there are Scandals—depending on whether or not the word starts at the beginning of a sentence.

GEMINI May 22 – June 21
Years of backbreaking work will finally pay off when your sales manager, walking hurriedly down the hallway, nods faintly in your general direction this week.

CANCER Jun 22 – Jul 22
A tragic boating accident will soon claim the lives of the lead singer, guitarist, and drummer of your one-man band.

LEO Jul 23 – Aug 22
Remember a couple of months back when the stars accurately predicted the birth of your second child? Man, that was great.

VIRGO Aug 23 – Sep 22
Keep in mind this week that anger is fear in disguise, although why you'd be afraid of the soda machine eating your dollar is for you alone to answer.

LIBRA Sep 23 – Oct 23
Like a moth to a flame, you too will be strongly attracted to a giant flame today.

SCORPIO Oct 24 – Nov 21
The fifth coming of Jesus Christ this week will reveal that you haven't been paying as much attention as you'd thought.

SAGITTARIUS Nov 22 – Dec 21
You'll be brought face-to-face with your own mortality during a series of harrowing stabs to the jaw and forehead.

■ A section for all you budding etymologists where each week the origin of a word or phrase is investigated.

This week it is..... Tall story

An untrue and unbelievable story.

Tall stories are pieces of verbal exaggeration or boastfulness which may be intended to deceive or may be openly bogus and merely intended to amuse. The name was coined in the 19th century in England, where the stories were also called Munchausens, after Karl Friedrich Hieronymus, Baron von Münchhausen. He might sound fictional, but was in fact a real person, albeit a purveyor of extravagantly untruthful stories about himself.

In the USA, the openly bogus 'around the campfire' stories are known as 'tall tales' and, under that name, have become a distinct and stylised form of storytelling, becoming ever more embellished as they are retold. Tall tales usually involve a larger-than-life mythical character who accomplishes some superhuman task; for example Paul Bunyan, the giant lumberjack who could fell a tree with a single swing of his axe.

'Tall stories', 'tall tales' and other variants, like 'tall talk' and 'tall writing', were in use in the 19th century. Examples of these are:

- Routledge's Every Boy's Annual, 1869: "Tall stories - What the Yankees call 'tall talk'."

- The playground of Europe, Sir Leslie Stephen, 1871: "Tall talk is luckily an object of suspicion to Englishmen."

Our usual understanding of 'tall' is that of the OED's unambiguous definition - "of more than average length when measured from bottom to top", and seems like an odd choice of adjective for a fanciful story. The word had been used with another meaning since the early 1600s, that is, 'lofty; grand'. That meaning of 'tall' was used especially with regard to high-flown and flowery language. John Eachard made use of the term in The Grounds & Occasions of the Contempt of the Clergy, 1670:

"Others there be, whose parts stand not so much towards tall words and lofty notions, but consist of scattering up and down, and besprinkling all their sermons with plenty of Greek and Latin."

'Tall talk' was in direct contrast with 'small-talk'. That term, meaning 'light conversation or chit-chat', was introduced in the 18th century. 'Tall talk' was what men indulged in amongst themselves and 'small-talk' when women were present. An early example of that comes in the 4th Earl of Chesterfield's Letters, 1761:

"A sort of chit-chat, or small-talk, which is the general run of conversation in most mixed companies."

■ WINE TASTING

At a wine merchant's warehouse the regular taster died, and the director started looking for a new one to hire.
A retired Merchant Navy Officer, drunk and with a ragged dirty look came to apply for the position.
The director wondered how to send him away.
They gave him a glass to drink, the old salt tried it and said, "It's a Muscat three years old, grown on a north slope, matured in steel containers. Low grade but acceptable."
"That's correct", said the boss. "Another glass, please."
"It's a cabernet, eight years old, south-western slope, oak barrels, matured at eight degrees. Requires three more years for finest results."
"Absolutely correct. A third glass."
''It's a pinot blanc champagne, high grade and exclusive" calmly said the drunk. The director was astonished and winked at his secretary to suggest something. She left the room and came back in with a glass of urine.
The alcoholic tried it.
"It's a blonde, 26 years old, three months pregnant, and if I don't get the job..... I'll name the father."

■ ELEPHANT

I bought my friend an elephant for his room, he said, "Thank you".

I said, "Don't mention it".

■ OPERATION

An elderly man was on the operating table, about to be operated on by his son, a famous surgeon. Just before they put him under, he asked to speak to his son:
"Don't be nervous, boy, just do your best and just remember, if it doesn't go well, if something happens to me… your mother is going to come and live with you and your family."

■ THE FUTURE

Around 50% of our youth sees the future in a positive way. The other half doesn't have the money to buy the drugs.

"Doing business without advertising is like winking at a girl in the dark. You know what you are doing but nobody else does."

LIFE ON MARS

HOW TO SURVIVE AS AN ALIEN IN THAILAND

BUYER BEWARE!

Most people from Western countries are well used to fairly comprehensive and strict laws regarding consumer's rights, and it can come as a quite a shock the first time they try to return a faulty or wrongly purchased item in Thailand, although some retailers are better than others in this respect.

Western retailers generally see the advantages of not only abiding by the law but actually going beyond their legal obligations on many occasions, with the belief that keeping a customer happy will mean repeat custom from them.

The Thai law regarding consumer rights is the Consumer protection Act, B.E. 2522 (1979), but this does not appear to codify any rights similar to laws in, for example, the UK or US, with regard to faulty or wrongly bought items.

Most retailers will actually allow the return of goods within a fairly short timespan, normally seven days (with proof of purchase), and depending on the item, sometimes beyond that but only acting as a conduit to the manufacturer.

Repairs are often offered for faulty items, but these frequently mean being without the item, especially anywhere outside Bangkok, as the items normally need to be sent to Bangkok. Hua Hin is gradually getting more service centres for major name electrical brands, but some product areas are not covered at all, notably computer hardware, which always needs to be sent elsewhere if requiring 'official' servicing by the manufacturer.

A similar problem is often experienced with products like water pumps and ceiling fans that carry long warranty periods from the manufacturer on their motors - it will often be a long battle to get these warranties honoured, not because of the manufacturer, but because it is often hard to find the right person to contact, and then the long time it often entails to get the work done - many people give up and purchase a complete new replacement!

THE NAME GAME

What's in a name?

Quite a lot if you happen to be a celebrity. Or more to the point if you are a celebrity choosing a name for one of your children, when anything goes, and the more creative the better, as we have seen with the children of Brad and Angelina.

The Jolie/Pitt children have been thrown into the spotlight by the announcement of what could become one of the biggest divorce cases in show business history. Not just financially, but also potentially a painful custody battle for all concerned. The sad thing is that the six assorted children didn't do anything to deserve what is happening to them, any more than they deserved some of their given names, which include Zahara, Shiloh and Pax. Nor did they ask to be part of what seems to be a social experiment in how to raise children to become model citizens of the world, by including trips to war zones as part of their education. A pretentious sounding ideal which thankfully only the rich and famous can aspire to.

Less wealthy but still up there in the fantasy world of naming children is celebrity chef Jamie Oliver, whose brood are known as River Rocket, Poppy Honey, Daisy Boo, Petal Blossom and Buddy Bear. It makes you wonder what magic ingredient the Olivers use in their cup cakes doesn't it?

Of course strange names are nothing new in the world of famous people. Back in 1971 David Bowies' newborn was named Duncan Zowie, and was known as Zowie until he grew up and chose to be known simply as Duncan. And in 1975 Bowies' friend Marc Bolan (of T Rex) named his son Rolan, a name he has stuck with ever since.

Back to the real world, and Bangkoks' aim of ending this year with a record number of 30 million tourists.

If that sounds like a lot, it is. The 2015 figure for tourists visiting the UK was just over 36 milion, which reflected a steady increase over the last 10 years. Of course the UK is an easier place for tourists to get into, with access by direct flights from 100 other countries, not to mention the channel tunnel, the Shengen agreement, and reliable North Sea ferry services. But with increasing tourism from China to Thailand who knows what is possible?

So it is re-assuring to see that Bangkok is taking it's traffic problems seriously, and has realised that it has too many cars on the roads. A conclusion which was reached last week at a large meeting of police, business people and others of note, which resulted in the establishment of 5 committees whose aims will be to look into what can be done.

Each committee will look at one specific area - law and enforcement, road maintenance, public transport, the role of technology, and public relations. And I can already hear you anticipating what the findings of each committee will be. Traffic laws need to be enforced, roads need to be maintained, traffic lights and cameras should work properly, more people should use the subway, and drivers should be asked nicely to car share.

One mode of transport you will all be familiar with was unveiled to the public for the first time on September 30th 1968. It was the Boeing 747, without which many of us would never have known Thailand in the first place.

FEATURED GAME

Sunday 2nd October 2016
PREMIER LEAGUE
Tottenham v Man City 20:15
The top two meet in what should be a high quality, high scoring encounter. Both teams have had impressive starts and this will be close, and for us too close to call anything other than a draw.

I AM THE WALRUS

MY OPINIONS ARE WORTH A LOT MORE THAN £400,000, INSISTS ALLARDYCE

■ ENGLAND

Sam Allardyce has denied being paid the 'insultingly low' sum of £400,000 for his frankly tremendous opinions today.

The famously modest and self-effacing Allardyce, who is accused of accepting cash to advise people on how to avoid transfer rules, denied the claims saying that the 'thinks in my head' are worth many millions of pounds and he's insulted anyone thinks he'd work so cheap.

"I was getting millions for managing the England team and that's mates rates," he told us in a statement.

"I'm that good at knowing football stuff it's worth way more than what they're saying I took," he said with characteristic humility.

"If a dodgy Eastern syndicate wanted to know how to break the rules I'd charge them umpty-billion pounds before I said word one. Then I'd only think about it."

Above: 'How much?!' - Allardyce finds out the amount 'Arry charged to inform dodgy geezers how to avoid FA rules

"That'll be ten grand for this statement," he added.

Allardyce has apparently engaged the services of Harry Redknapp's dog, Rosie, in a bid to help him avoid similar charges to those faced by Redknapp in 2012. Ironically, Redknapp has emerged as a favourite to succeed Allardyce as England manager now 'Big Sam' has been relieved of his duties.

Pundits have noted that Allardyce has left the England job with a 100% win record, making him the best coach the national team have ever had.
