COMMON SENSE

'ENTERTAINMENT' CAN RESUME FROM MIDDLE OF NOVEMBER

● HUA HIN

It's not a phrase that is often heard in Thailand, but the Thai government's announcement that normal entertainment activities can resume from 14th November, at the end of the 30 day mourning period for His Majesty the King, is absolute common sense. It was completely right to have a respectful and sombre period of reflection for the Thai people, and others, to mourn such a great loss, and we can only praise Thailand and it's people and government for how they have handled this .

The decision taken by the Cabinet on Tuesday, specified nine categories of entertainment activities: National festivals (e.g. Loy Krathong, Christmas, New Year and Chinese New Year), Provincial festivals (e.g. Red Cross fair,), Provincial-level economic promotion activities (e.g.bull-fighting, walking street festival), Entertainment activities (e.g. Likae, Lamtad, music festival, contest and movie show), Nightlife entertainment venues (e.g. nightclubs, pubs and bars), Activities in hotels (e.g. conferences, parties), Concerts, Cultural and traditional activities (e.g. thod kathin merit-making, pha pa, weddings and ordinations) and Sports competitions. However, organizers of activities in these categories must take into consideration the regulations governing the activities and suitability.

We would encourage everybody to continue observing the remainder of the mourning period appropriately, however, and not jump the gun, unless they have special permission to do so.

CAPRICORN DEC 22 - JAN 19

Farm animals can often sense an earthquake seconds before it hits, which explains why they're all looking at you with that huge grin on their face.

AQUARIUS JAN 20 – FEB 18

They say you can't judge a man until you've walked a mile in his shoes, but after 3,000 feet, you're beginning to suspect he'd like to have his sneakers back.

PISCES FEB 19 – MAR 20

After years of intense searching, you'll finally find yourself this week---naked, alone, and with a six foot gash across your forehead.

ARIES MAR 21 - APR 20

The suit jacket and tie might make you look more professional, but at the end of the day, you're still not wearing any pants.

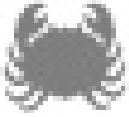
TAURUS APR 21 – MAY 21

Try as you might, you'll find yourself completely unable to escape this week's M.C. Escher Museum fire.

GEMINI MAY 22 – JUNE 21

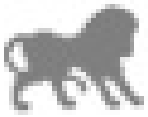
While it's natural for human beings to be resistant to change, after losing your family, job, and home, it's probably time you start accepting some from passersby.

CANCER JUN 22 – JUL 22



What begins this week as a hilarious balls-copying prank will end minutes later with the discovery of a rather large testicular tumor.

LEO JUL 23 – AUG 22

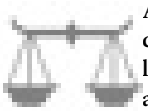


In many ways, you're still a child. None of them, however, will prevent you from being tried this week as an adult.

VIRGO AUG 23 – SEP 22

For the third time this week, you'll be forced to open up that same old tupperware container of leftover whupass.

LIBRA SEP 23 – OCT 23



A man is defined by the decisions he makes. Not listening to this piece of trite advice is probably a good start.

SCORPIO OCT 24 – NOV 21

Long, gray beards have for centuries been linked to wisdom and shrewdness. Sadly, you get yours caught in the fax machine far too often for that to be the case.

SAGITTARIUS NOV 22 – DEC 21

When it comes to race relations, you're colourblind. Also when it comes to sofas, desk chairs, and traffic lights.

● A section for all you budding etymologists where each week the origin of a word or phrase is investigated.

THIS WEEK IT IS..... DOWN TO THE WIRE

Referring to the decisive moment at the very end of a close contest.

'Down to the wire' is a commonly used expression these days, but the obvious thought that occurs is 'what wire?', so here is some clarity on the matter.

The earliest examples found of 'down to the wire' in print are from educative pieces about viniculture, in which gardeners are advised to tie their vines 'down to the wire'. It was also heard to describe car tyres that were on their last legs and had the underlying canvas and wire thread showing. Those aren't of course the source of the phrase, which it turns out has more to do with horses than horsepower.

People have bet on horse races for centuries and the outcome of these has always been of close interest to punters. Before the days of electronic measurement and photo finishes the method adopted in the 19th century to decide the winner of a close race was to string a wire across the track above the finishing line.

It's not clear where the expression 'down to the wire' was coined. The USA is most frequently cited, as demonstrated in this piece from the American journal Scribner's Magazine, July 1889:

As the end of the stand was reached Timarch worked up to Petrel, and the two raced down to the 'wire,' cheered on by the applause of the spectators. They ended the first half mile of the race head and head, passing lapped together under the wire, and beginning in earnest the mile which was yet to be traversed.

There is a competing claim from Australia. Here's a strange piece from the South Australian newspaper The Southern Argus, June 1884:

The first event on the programme was a chorus for all ages, with some twenty entries, all of whom came to the post. They got rather a bad start, Soprano running away with the lead, Contralto second, Tenor third, Basso fourth, at least twenty lengths behind. At the quarter there was no particular change, but going down the back stretch all closed up, and there was a terrific race round the, turn and down to the wire, Soprano, staying the longest, and winning by a neck, amidst uproarious applause.

The strangeness of the above is explained by the fact that it was written as a spoof by the newspaper's horse racing correspondent who was given the task, clearly unwelcome to him, of reviewing a singing contest. As a form of protest, he decided to enliven his copy by writing it up in the form of a racing commentary.

It's clear that the expression 'down to the wire' was known to racing devotees in the 1880s in both Australia and the USA. At present, Australia has a close lead but further citations may well yet come to light. I'm obliged to say that, as far as deciding the origin goes, it will go down to the wire.

● MAGIC

Bloke goes to nightschool to learn magic and join the Magic Circle. One night, he gets back home and the wife is standing in the kitchen with their two kids.

"What did you do tonight,Frank?" says the missus

"I learned how to change people into furniture"

"Go on then, change me and the two kids into a three piece suite"

He waves his magic wand, mutters a spell, there's a flash and a bang and a three piece suite is there in the kitchen.

"Very good, now change us back" says the settee.

No matter how hard he tries, he can't reverse the spell and calls 999 and the ambulance as a last resort. He paces up and down outside the casualty department worried sick and after two hours, the doctor emerges.

"How's my family, Doctor?"

"They're comfortable"

● RAT

A tourist wanders into a back-alley antique shop in San Francisco's Chinatown. Picking through the objects on display he discovers a detailed bronze sculpture of a rat. The sculpture is so interesting and unique that he picks it up and asks the shop owner the price.

"Twelve dollars for the rat, sir," says the shop owner, "and an extra thousand for the story behind it."

"At that price, you can keep the story, old man," he replies, "but I'll take the bronze rat."

The transaction complete, the tourist leaves the store with the bronze rat under his arm. As he crosses the street in front of the store, two live rats emerge from a sewer drain and fall into step behind him. Nervously looking over his shoulder, he begins to walk faster, but every time he passes another sewer, more rats come out and follow him. By the time he's walked two blocks, at least a hundred rats are at his heels, and people begin to point and shout. He walks even faster, and soon breaks into a trot as multitudes of rats swarm from sewers, basements, vacant lots, and abandoned cars... following him.

Rats by the thousands are at his heels, and as he sees the waterfront at the bottom of the hill he panics and starts to run full tilt. No matter how fast he runs, the rats keep up, squealing hideously now not just thousands but millions, so that by the time he comes racing to the water's edge a trail of rats twelve blocks long is behind him.

Making a mighty leap, he jumps up onto a lamp post, grasping it with one arm, while he hurls the bronze rat into San Francisco Bay as far as he can throw it.

Pulling his legs up and clinging to the post, he watches in amazement as the seething tide of rats surges over the breakwater into the sea, where they drown.

Shaken and mumbling, he makes his way back to the antique shop.

"Ah sir, you've come back for the story," says the owner.

"No," says the tourist, "I was just hoping you had a bronze sculpture of a lawyer "

"Doing business without advertising is like winking at a girl in the dark. You know what you are doing but nobody else does."

● I'VE GOT THE POWER

The 'virgin' expat to Thailand is always going to encounter some unexpected and apparently inexplicable behaviour by the locals, as well as equally puzzling happenings involving the infrastructure of the country, most notably the various utilities.

While power cuts obviously happen all over the world, due to a variety of things, the sheer number of them generally in Thailand is much more than most have encountered. The sometimes extreme weather is part of the reason, but most people can accept that without too much question, as it is understandable. However, given that the price of electricity here is relatively high in comparison to other utilities, the frequent 'brown outs' and extremely brief blackouts start to become a severe inconvenience and a major irritation. Unless you invest in Universal Power Supply units for your most delicate electrical appliances, such as computers, the frequent power outages and fluctuations in voltage will eventually do serious damage to your equipment... and despite the UPS boxes being designed to cope with this, they also sometimes stop working due to the frequency of these electrical disturbances.

On the issue of the voltage fluctuations, which are obvious if you ever use a toaster regularly, as the same setting will either burn your bread to a crisp or barely warm it on occasion, we have never heard a satisfactory explanation to explain them.

The power cuts can be for something as simple as a tree swaying in the wind and pushing or pulling the cables, or some creature, most often a snake, coiling itself somewhere it shouldn't. However most of it comes down to poor quality of either installation, equipment or maintenance, and this will likely never improve unless customers start reporting and complaining.

There is a central call centre (call 1129) for the PEA (Provincial Electricity Authority) and customers should make a point of calling them whenever there are power cuts - the call centre has English speaking staff, more so than the local office, and after your first couple of calls will have your name and address details which speeds the whole process up, and to be fair to them are very helpful and sympathetic. Your calls will help them identify where the problems lie in the infrastructure, and hopefully over the long term, help them address the problems, whether they are individual to your home or apply to the whole area.

In a future 'Life On Mars' we will be returning to the subject of electricity, and in particular the so far missed opportunity of solar power, but also the problems in finding electricians who know what they are doing...

● THE DANGERS OF DEMOCRACY

Anyone who is familiar with Thailand, and especially with Bangkok, will be able to identify scores of accidents waiting to happen. The strange thing is that when an accident does occur it can actually come as a bit of a surprise. LIke the crane which collapsed onto a sidewalk on Sukhumvit Road last week.

Maybe it's because we are programmed to anticipate danger from traffic, trains, floods, fires, electricity supplies, elephants, snakes, and anything at all on Patpong. It just goes to show that you can never be sure what is around the corner. And the good people of America still can't be sure what will happen in their Presidential election next Tuesday.

Back in 1980, on November 4th, the Republican candidate Ronald Reagan won a landslide victory over Jimmy Carter. Reagan was a rarity in that the majority of US Presidents emerge from the ranks of high office in government or the military rather than Hollywood. Nevertheless Reagan is considered by many to have been one of the best Presidents ever.

Whether another candidate without the traditional credentials will end up in the Oval Office remains to be seen, and Tuesdays' vote isn't even the end of it all.

Which is where the whole thing becomes very confusing for many of us who are used to a straightforward first past the post electoral system. So as one such dumb Brit, who has followed the Presidential campaign this year since the Primaries, I thought I'd better try to suss it all out.

The first thing about a Presidential election is that it takes forever, beginning in February with the Primaries, where votes for the candidates are cast State by State. Even that isn't as simple as it sounds, because a small number of States use the 'caucus' system of balloting, in which small groups of voters gather together and argue the pros and cons of each candidate with the aim of all reaching the same decision. We can probably gloss over that one.

After a few months the clear front runners emerge and are officially nominated as candidates at their respective party conventions. The candidates then each reveal their choice of prospective Vice President. Each candidate also has their own Electoral College members who are chosen by their party.

If it then went straight to a country wide election we non Americans could cope with the concept, but of course it doesn't. There are many more weeks of campaigning, and that Electoral College to get our heads around.

The Electoral College is a process. It is made up of 538 members, equivalent to the number of Congress members, who are allocated to States based on the number of existing Congress members each State has, and on Tuesday it will be Electoral College members who people will be voting for - not one of the Presidential candidates. It will be the College member in each State with the most votes who wins the right to combine all the Electoral College votes in their own State together and put them on the Presidential candidate of their own choice. The winning College member isn't even legally obliged to vote for the Presidential candidate of his/her own party, which may help to explain why, especially this year, so many Americans have seemed so willing to change sides. They are actually voting for the voters who in theory can do their own thing.

This system is said to be a compromise between the election of a President by the people or by Congress, which on the face of it seems reasonable. The US is a huge country with very diverse needs, and its leader is arguably the most prominent and influential figure world wide. Whether the US system can really be called democratic though is open to debate, and whether that actually matters this year is equally debatable.

The Electoral College needs 270 of its 538 votes to win, a margin of only two votes, which in Britain would be met with howls for a re-count, and whoever is elected as President won't be inaugurated until January 20th, shortly after the Electoral College votes have been formally counted before Congress. By then the whole process will have taken almost a year. Let's hope it will be worth it.

On This Day

In keeping with this week's column, it was on this day 8 years ago that Barack Obama became the first African-American to be elected President Of The United States. It was also on this day in 1862 that Dr Richard Gatling patented the Gatling Gun in Indianapolis, and in 1922 Howard Carter discovered the tomb of Tutankhamen in Egypt.. A pretty historic day really.

FEATURED GAME

SUNDAY 6TH NOVEMBER 2016
PREMIER LEAGUE
Arsenal v Tottenham 19:00

Excuse the Guy Fawkes night pun, but we can expect fireworks as two of the league's in form teams meet in a hotly contested North London derby. Spurs were held by Champions Leicester last weekend, and for a while it looked like Arsenal may also be, but they ended up comfortable winners against bottom club Sunderland. As usual with these fixtures it is really too close to call, and we expect another derby day draw, albeit a pulsating one.

THE WEST HAM 'WAY'

HAMMERS FEAR TOUGH REPRISALS AFTER TROUBLE AT NEW STADIUM

● ENGLAND

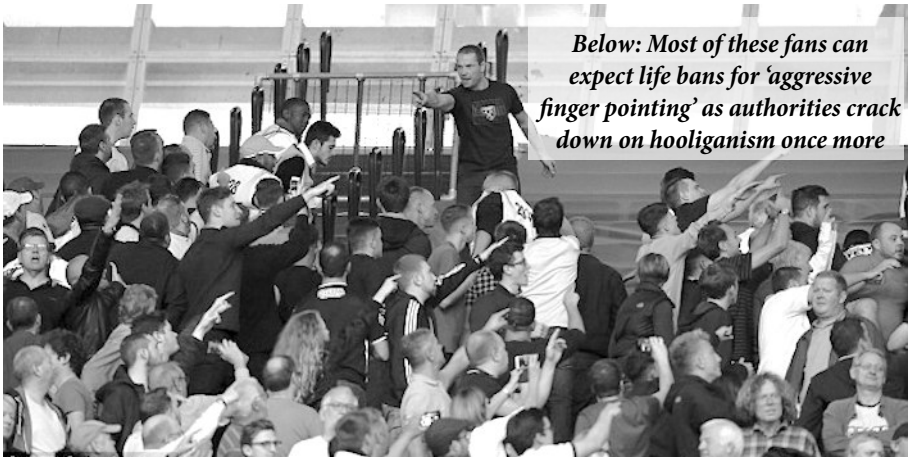
The fallout from the fighting that 'erupted' at West Ham's imaginatively named London Stadium during their League Cup match against Chelsea last week refuses to go away this week, as the media tire of slagging off Jose Mourinho and his under performing Manchester United team and have run out of dribble salivating over Liverpool and Chelsea.

Police made seven arrests, representing a 'massive' 0.01% section of the 60,000 fans attending, amid scenes described by some football journalists as 'the worst I have ever seen in my two weeks at the Daily Express'.

West Ham management and fans fear the worst, as Henry Winter of the Daily Telegraph and Oliver Holt of the Daily Mail have been called to a legal summit with Lord Griffiths over the 'rioting', and are expecting relegation to League Two and a fine of at least £20 billion, in line with the just desserts they received over breaking rules with the two Argentinian players, Carlos Tevez and Javier Mascherano, in 2008.



Below: Most of these fans can expect life bans for 'aggressive finger pointing' as authorities crack down on hooliganism once more

Meanwhile, the landlord at the Dog and Duck in Stratford is not expecting any recriminations after police arrested 10 men at his pub on Saturday for being drunk and disorderly, after a fight broke out among them, while the other twenty patrons looked on.
