THAI DEFAMATION LAW UNDER FIRE IN BBC REPORTER CASE

● THAILAND

The lawsuit that got underway last Thursday in Phuket against the BBC reporter Jonathan Head has once again highlighted the problem with Thailand's defamation laws, which lead to criminal and not civil cases. Mr Head was accused of defamation by Phuket lawyer Pratuan Thanarak, after the BBC reported that he had admitted to notarising a signature without the signatory being present. This was all connected to a property scam carried out against British national Ian Rance, who is a co-defendant with the BBC reporter,; Mr Rance's wife Suda is currently serving a four year jail sentence for her part in the scam.

Defamation, more commonly known as slander or libel, is where a person or organisation has seen their name or reputation sullied publically either in spoken or written form. In the majority of the world, this is pursued by the individual or organisation in a civil case, and if what was written or said was true, there is no case; in Thailand though, it is a criminal case, and the truth is little defence, with the main emphasis of the court placed on whether or not the words spoken or written have genuinely caused defamation. If found guilty, both defendants face up to two years in jail. In addition Mr Head faces charges under the Computer Crimes Act, which has a five-year maximum jail penalty. The case is scheduled to be dealt with in August.

To put this situation in context, Human Rights Watch Asia Director Brad Adams said in a statement, "This is the kind of case that shows exactly why having criminal defamation laws is such a bad idea. The threat to lock someone away for what they said, or in this case, reported in the media is far too easily abused by those with time and money to engage in a game of legal blood sport by dragging people through the Thai court system," and added, "Thailand should also move to immediately revise the Computer Crimes Act to bring it into compliance with the government's obligations to protect freedom of expression under the United Nations Convention on Civil and Political Rights that Thailand has ratified."

● A section for all you budding etymologists where each week the origin of a word or phrase is investigated.

THIS WEEK IT IS.....NO LAUGHING MATTER

Not a subject for levity.

Like 'no holds barred' and 'no room to swing a cat', 'no laughing matter' is almost always expressed as a negative. Comic situations aren't usually referred to as laughing matters. That wasn't always the case - 'laughing matter' was a commonplace idiom before anyone ever thought to make a negative phrase out of it.

The phrase sounds as though it might be of quite recent coinage but in fact it has been known since Tudor days, as in this example where the Bishop of Worcester, Hugh Latimer published a tirade against the selling of religious favours - The seconde sermon preached before the kynges maiestie, 1549:

These sellers of offices shew that they beleue that there is neyther hell nor heauen. It is taken for a laughynge matter.

Edward V, who was king at the time, couldn't have been overly impressed as the selling of favours continued for many years after this sermon was preached.

Latimer was nothing if not persistent and the first instance of 'no laughing matter' is found in John Foxe's reports of his continuing campaign against religious corruption - Actes and monuments touching matters of the Church, 1563:

Then the audience laughed againe, and maister Latimer spake vnto them saying: why my maisters, this is no laughyng matter. I aunsweare vpon life and death.

Latimer was devout and, if contemporary reports are to be believed, of a rather dour disposition - which is appropriate for the chief instigator of a phrase like 'no laughing matter'. His parents considered that he had a "ready, prompt, and sharp wit" but by 'wit' they meant 'intellect' rather than 'humour' and "purposed to train him up in erudition".

Woman who found £20 on the floor ended up with a criminal record for pocketing it

A woman has ended up with a criminal record after she found £20 on the floor and put it in her pocket.

Nicole Bailey, 23, who has no previous conviction was caught on CCTV, tracked down by police and hauled before the courts on a theft charge.

She initially denied she had taken it but after being presented with the footage she admitted what she had done.

The money belonged to a man who withdrew the cash at One Stop in Blurton, Stoke-on-Trent.

However, he dropped it and told staff when he realised he had lost it but the money was nowhere to be seen.

Prosecutor Ruth Bentley said: 'Staff checked the CCTV which showed a female pick up the £20 note from a display in the store. The manager recognised the woman, who was a regular customer.'

The court heard police were called in and Bailey, who lives locally, attended a voluntary interview.

She initially denied taking it, but admitted it when she was shown the CCTV footage. Bailey, who has no previous convictions, went on to plead guilty to theft.

Simon Dykes, mitigating, said the matter should have been dealt with by a police caution.

He said: 'She didn't know who the money belonged to. People don't realise picking up something you have found amounts to a theft. She has been quite naive in doing so.'

She's now been given a conditional discharge and was ordered to pay £175 in costs and charges.

Now police have warned people to forget the old 'finders keepers' saying it's a crime to keep money or goods someone else has lost.

Staffordshire Police Chief Inspector Karen Stevenson, said: 'We would actively encourage any member of the public who picks up money that has been dropped to be honest and do the right thing by taking all reasonable steps to try and find the owner.'

Woman, 99, gets arrested and booked into jail cell as part of bucket list

An elderly woman has managed to cross off a rather unusual item from her bucket list after she was 'arrested' and 'booked' into a jail cell at her local police station.

Annie, from The Netherlands, had always wanted to experience what it would be like to be jailed.

And her wish finally came true after police in Nijmegen-Zuid, eastern Netherlands, granted her her wish of getting the 'inside experience'.

Pictures shared by the police on their Facebook page show Annie smiling with glee as she sat handcuffed and waving to the camera from within a cell.

The caption explained how Annie was almost 100 years old and had always wanted to 'experience a police cell from within'.

Man sets sail using iPad for navigation, crashes into ferry when wifi disappears

A man decided it would be a good idea to set sail in his Second World War boat with just his iPad as navigation.

David Carlin, 34, didn't last that long though because soon after, he crashed into a ferry after his wifi connection disappeared.

The 34-year-old accidentally navigated the 50ft wooden Peggotty, which did not even have a compass, into the main shipping lane of the Humber Estuary during dense fog and then crashed into a cargo ferry last May.

His vessel sunk within half an hour and Mr Carlin, a pilot with Associated British Ports, was forced to put out a Mayday call.

Mr Carlin and his passenger had been relying on a navigation app on an iPad when the collision occurred.

Now, he has been fined £3,000 for breaching maritime laws and suspended from his job.

According to The Sun, Mr Carlin was on his way from Grimsby to Hull to get a survey done of the vessel because he and his wife Hannah wanted to sell it.

Gwen Lancaster, of the Maritime & Coastguard Agency's Hull Marine Office, said: 'I am surprised this collision, which could easily have resulted in far worse consequences, occurred in the first place.

'Both vessels were under the command of experienced professional captains who should have known better.'

● DIRTY LAUNDRY Thanks to Denis
A newlywed couple arrived back from honeymoon to move into their tiny new flat.
"Care to go to bed?" the husband asked.
"Shh!" said his blushing bride. "These walls are paper thin. The neighbours will know what you mean! Next time, ask me in code - like, 'Have you left the washing machine door open' - instead."
So, the following night, the husband asks: "I don't suppose you left the washing machine door open, darling?"
"No," she snapped back, "I definitely shut it." Then she rolled over and fell asleep.
The next morning, she woke up feeling a little frisky herself, so she nudged her husband and said: "I think I did leave the washing machine door open after all..."
"Don't worry," said the man. "It was only a small load so I did it by hand."

● OCD
I have CDO...

It's like OCD but all the letters are in alphabetical order... as they should be.

● DOM
A farmer wanted to have his hens serviced, so he went to the market looking for a rooster. He was hoping he could get a special rooster, one that could service all of his many hens.
He told this to the market vendor. The vendor replied, "I have just the rooster for you. Dom here is the horniest rooster you will ever see!"
So the farmer took Dom back to the farm. Before setting him loose in the henhouse though, he gave Dom a little pep talk.
"Dom", he said, "I'm counting on you to do your stuff."
And without a word Dom strutted into the henhouse. Dom was as fast as he was furious, mounting each hen like a thunderbolt. There was much squawking and many feathers flying, till Dom had finished having his way with each hen.
But Dom didn't stop there. He went in to the barn and mounted all the horses, one by one and still at the same frantic pace. Then he went to the pighouse, where he did the same.
The farmer, watching all of this with disbelief, cried out, "Stop, Dom,you'll kill yourself."
But Dom continued, seeking out each farm animal in the same manner.
Well, the next morning, the farmer looked out and saw Dom lying there on his lawn. His legs were up in the air, his eyes rolled back, and his long tongue hanging out. A buzzard was already circling above Dom.
The farmer walked up to Dom saying, "Oh you poor thing, look what you did, you've gone and killed yourself. I warned you my little buddy."
"Shhhhh," Dom whispered. "The buzzard's getting closer."

"Doing business without advertising is like winking at a girl in the dark. You know what you are doing but nobody else does."

● GRASSED UP

Most expats know very well that marijuana and cannabis, along with many other recreational drugs, are illegal in Thailand, with hefty fines and/or jail time on the cards for transgressing the laws.

However, there is a growing trend globally to legalise at least some uses of some types of marijuana, notably the medicinal uses of hemp, and this trend is getting closer to being seen in Thailand as well.

At the beginning of this year, the Thai government approved proposal to allow hemp to be grown as a crash crop and for medical purposes in 15 of its districts in six provinces, - Chiang Mai, Chiang Rai, Nan, Tak, Phetchabun and Mae Hong Son..

Growers will be limited to cultivating hemp that contains no more than 1 percent of tetrahydrocannabinol (THC), the psychoactive ingredient that causes a high. Those found growing hemp with higher levels of THC are susceptible to legal consequences.

The government initiative is part of an effort to relax drug laws on substances with known medicinal benefits. The cabinet also plans to look into softening the laws on marijuana, methamphetamine, and kratom, a tropical tree that may help manage pain. Methamphetamine has been moved from a Type 1 narcotic to a Type 2 to allow for scientific research, while marijuana and kratom are already being studied.

Hemp and marijuana are both members of the Cannabis sativa L plant species, but hemp is typically grown for food, oil and fiber, and naturally contains lower levels of THC. Compared to marijuana, hemp contains more cannabidiol (CBD), a cannabinoid that has been shown to have significant antioxidant and neuroprotective properties in a patent by the United States National Institutes of Health. Thousands of studies examining the medicinal potential of cannabis have been completed and several more are currently in progress.

Thailand Justice Minister General Paiboom Koomchaya has said previously that he wants to remove marijuana and kratom from the country's list of prohibited narcotics. In a November meeting with officials and civil groups, the Justice Minister noted that prohibition has been unsuccessful and urged that the plants be treated as medicinal herbs.

Until things change, marijuana for medical or personal purposes remains illegal in Thailand, with use being punishable by up to 1 year in prison and a fine of up to 20,000 baht. Possession of up to 10kg is susceptible to up to a 5-year jail sentence and a maximum fine of 100,000 baht.

With such a wide range of illnesses that can apparently be alleviated or even cured by marijuana, with cancer a particularly important one, it has to be hoped that the easing of the law comes sooner rather than later.

● BOUQUETS AND BRICKBATS

This weeks awards for most notable anniversaries go to ..... first, the birth of Alexander Graham Bell on March 3rd 1847. Next, the Indian Mogul Emperor Akbar, who on the same day in 1575 defeated the Bengali army in the battle of Tukaroi. Without those men we might never have had the telephone, or a well known chain of Indian restaurants.

Yes the silly season of awards ceremonies is infectious, as well as mind numbingly tedious. It serves to provide female celebrities with the opportunity to parade in designer frocks, and to tell the world how they feel about everything from global warming to Trump to exploited children/animals/refugees.

Because celebs have to have a cause don't they? It is no longer enough for them to just sing, act or dance. They have an obligation to show the world that they care. Some like to adopt children from as many ethnic backgrounds as they can find, which enhances their maternal image while avoiding the stretch marks, and displays their politically correct belief in multiculturalism.

A host of others support environmental causes, and not just the women. The list of male celeb environmentalists includes Richard Branson, Leonardo DiCaprio, Robert Redford and Willie Nelson, but it always seems to be the women who attract the most media attention for their good works. Maybe because flashing a little flesh helps, or perhaps as insurance against the day when they are no longer movie or pop icons.

Of course there is nothing wrong with supporting good causes, especially for those who can pour money into them. In an ideal world there would be no need for charity - or for saving the environment - but as long as there is a need there will be famous people who either use their status to promote their cause, or promote their cause to enhance their celeb image. It's just that some manage not to make a song and dance about it.

Much of this good work to save the planet began with the first Live Aid concert in 1985. The brain child of Bob Geldof and his pals, Live Aid was a great gig. Unfortunately the proceeds of the concert didn't provide quite as much aide as was hoped, once the backhanders had been syphoned off, cash mysteriously disappeared, and projects couldn't be sustained.

Even before Live Aid actress Jane Fonda famously caused controversy when she denounced the US Imperialists who were bombing Vietnam. She believed, as did many others, that America shouldn't have got involved in the conflict, but her mission backfired badly in 1972 when photos emerged of her perched on a North Vietnamese anti aircraft gun, surrounded by her Vietnamese pals, while GI's were allegedly being tortured nearby. She earned the name Hanoi Jane for her efforts.

One very high profile woman in particular who worked for her chosen good causes was Princess Diana. For all UK royals doing good deeds is part of the job, but Diana went out on a limb with her involvement in land mine and HIV/Aids issues. This year will mark the 20th anniversary of her death, and her sons Princes' William and Harry have commissioned a new statue of their late Mother. They have also endorsed the newly opened exhibition of her most iconic dresses in Kensington Palace, for which the admission charge includes a 'voluntary' donation to charity.

It is understandable for the Princes to want to mark the anniversary in some way. After all they were very young when Diana died in an accident, which in itself provoked worldwide speculation, as well as some condemnation of their Father and Grandmother. And no-one can ever replace their Mother, who they will remember every day of their lives. But already the exhibition of dresses has sparked some of the same old stories about their parents' marriage, along with memories of that 1995 BBC TV interview in which Diana deliberately and publicly spilled the matrimonial beans. In any other circumstances a performance which would have seen Social Services knocking on her door.

Wouldn't it be more appropriate to hold a private rememberance, and leave the public memory of Diana to pass naturally into history?

And finally, the award for best piece of Thailogic so far this year has to go to the Chief of Pattayas' police, who has joined in the debate about the image of his city by saying that Pattaya is more about nature than sex. Nice try Chief - after all what can be more natural than sex?

FEATURED GAME

SUNDAY 5TH MARCH 2017
PREMIER LEAGUE
Liverpool v Arsenal 00:30
Realistically Arsene Wenger must have given up hope of progressing in the Champions League, so their second leg match against Bayern the following Tuesday should not prevent him and his team focusing on this game; however Liverpool have absolutely no distractions other than their faltering form and will want to up their game to deal a devestating blow to a rival for the top four. These are normally fantastic games played at pace and we think this is going to be thrill a minute stuff. Without question Liverpool will raise their game but will it be enough? We think it will, with Arsenal looking at dropping to sixth place if Machester United win in the early game as well.

MIRACLE WORKERS

LEICESTER CITY OWNERS SACK CATERING TEAM FOR FAILING TO TURN WATER INTO WINE

● UK

Leicester City FC has taken the unusual step of sacking their match-day catering team after they failed to turn water into wine.

Despite creating meals that defied all expectations last season, the fact that miracles have not literally been performed this season was enough.

At a hastly convened press conference Vice-chairman Aiyawatt Srivaddhanaprabha told reporters, "Last season we handed the catering team a couple of loaves and some fish and they created a series of match-day delicacies that delighted everyone at the King Power Stadium.

"But this year, no matter how many jugs of water we provided, they didn't create one drop of wine. That is simply unacceptable by the standards of Leicester City.

"They used excused like one of their most important chefs being poached by Chelsea, but frankly they should be accepting responsibility.

"Leicester is the place of miracle, and if you can't keep delivering them, we'll show you the door."

The vacant position has been advertised as seeking applicants with a solid track record of 'healing lepers' or 'walking great distances over water'.

Many pundits believe that Harry Redknapp is a shoe in for the also vacant manger's job, as it was a miracle that he avoided going to jail in his tax evasion case in 2012.
